ART. I. Notices of the city of Borneo and its inhabitants, made during the voyage of the American brig Himmaleh in the Indian Archipelago, in 1837. From a Correspondent.

From the Chinese Repository, for August,

Friday, May 26th. A white flag has been hanging before the masjid during the day, and at 10 o'clock the drum was beaten. Saw a few persons, perhaps fifty, go to the mosque. But though the mosque seems to be neglected, all those about us, whose habits we have had an opportuity of observing, are careful to say their prayers several times a day, their faces of course turned towards Mecca. Among the slaves about the sultan's house, there is one whose appearance is more than ordinarily interesting. I have for some time been watching for an opportunity to speak to him. I find that he does not speak Malay, but Spanish. I ascertained from another slave, that this interesting youth is from the Sooloo islands, and was brought hither by our old acquaintance raja Muda, and sold to the sultan for a mere trifle. The sale was doubtless only a sham to save appearances the slave being in fact a present to the sultan, to secure, if not his protection, at least his connivance, towards piracy and the slave trade.

May 27th. We have succeeded at last in purchasing some cloth; and this morning we presented to the sultan 15 dollars' worth of cloth and other articles, which we thought would be a liberal compensation for the rice we have eaten. He said he was pleased, and that it was proper we should make these offerings, as he had furnished us food for a long time. He then contrived to send one out of us as much more, by sending all his slaves to receive each a piece of cloth. There was no refusing them, as they came declaring, and no doubt truly, that the sultan had sent them. Last of all, the sultan himself came in and begged for more cloth. We were afterwards told that he took from the slaves the cloth we had given them. Today one of the couriers requested me to write down and preserve his name, and also the names of several others, seven in all, who he said were the orang biekara, or men near the sultan, to consult with and assist him, a sort of privy council. They are councellors worthy to surround such a sovereign. If seven men were to be taken at random from the dregs of any city, Christian or pagan, they would probably not be inferior to these seven wise men of Brunei. This privy council is a burlesque upon all dignity, when sitting, as their custom is, a few yards from the sultan, listening to his harangues on the superiority of Brunei to all the armies and navies of the white men, and occasionally receiving with profound respect the betel which he condecends to give them from his royal mouth.

Monday, May 29th. Captain F. and captain M., with all their men and goods, left early in the morning for the vessels, our captain promising to send for us in the evening by the return of tide. Though I had been ill for two or three days, and was still weak, I ventured to accompany Mr. Lay to the hills, as it was to be the last time. Our walk was a long one, not less than 12 miles altogether. The path was much of the way through the forest. Sago trees were numerous. We passed a place where several men were washing the wood, previously chopped fine, to procure the edible sago. The higher ground and the sides of the hills, were covered with pine apples, which were growing abundantly, and without much labor of the husbandman. Passed over a number of small creeks, a single log being placed across, to serve as a bridge. Ascended and descended several high hills. From the top of one these, which we supposed to be 500 feet high, we had a noble view of the sea, the island of Labuan, the river's mouth, and a broad landscape of hills and valleys, skirted by high lands and distant mountains. On this hill, the natives who were with us pointed out a camphor tree. It was a stately looking tree, with a trunk at least a foot and a half in diameter, perfectly straight, and growing up to the height of fifty or sixty feet before it put forth branches. We passed several houses of the Kadayons, some of which we entered. Called upon an orang kaya, a title of distinction conferred upon some rich men (the words themselves signifying rich man). He was the chief man of the district. He treated us kindly, and gave us coffee and excellent plantains and pine apples. On our return we stopped by the side of a pleasant stream, (the Rianggi, before noticed,) under the shade of some large trees, to rest ourselves. Here Mr Lay struck his hammer upon a rock, and found it was coal. On further examination, it appeared that there was a large vein of superior bituminous coal, easily accessible, being not over a mile from the town, and capable of being transported most of the way by water. We had all things ready in the evening for our departure, but the boat did not come for us.

May 30th. A day of suspense and anxiety. We hear nothing of the boat, which according to promise should have come last evening. Two of the servants, who have shown themselves friendly to us, were put in the stocks yesterday. The reason of this probably is, that the sultan fears they may make their escape in our vessel. One of these men has acted as our cook, and, under the stimulus of kind words, and an occasional rupee, put into his hand by stealth, lest the sultan seeing is should take it from him, has done as well for us in the way of furnishing food as the allowance dealt out to him by the sultan could enable him to do. This fellow came to Brunei, a few years since, a free man, and the sultan finding him useful, has made a slave of him. Another man who came here from Sambas, and who, supposing he had a right to leave whenever he pleased, had engaged his passage to Singapore on board our vessel, and had laid in his stock of provisions, and put them on board the captain's boat, was ordered by the sultan to get out of the boat, and not to think of going away.

Two priests called. They were talkative and friendly. One of them asked for something, and on receiving a rupee, he thanked me, and seemed to be truly grateful. This man, and our poor old cook and his companion now in the stocks, are the only instances of even apparent gratitude which I have met with here. The sultan promised that his boat, which was going at night to the vessels, should take us along, but we were not surprised to find that this promise was not regarded. We have still some cloth and other articles, which he hopes to get hold of before we go. At midnight there was a brightness in the east, which, when we were first called up to see it, and before knowing the hour of the night, I imagined to be the rising of the sun. It resembled the Aurora Borealis, but exhibited none of the sudden changes and oscillations of light which are so conspicuous in the polar lights. It was a brilliant but steady light, extending some twenty degrees above the horizon, and confined to the one spot where I first saw it. I watched it about half an hour, and saw it gradually fade away. The sultan's people say that they saw the same appearance last night in the south. They wish to know what evil it portends.

May 31st. No boat. The sultan and some of his men declare that our vessel has sailed. Whether they really think so, or whether they say it only to vex us, we cannot tell. They at least seem pleased at our disappointment. Several pieces of cloth stolen. Mr. L. has had things stolen before. On the whole, though our situation here, particularly of late, has been sufficiently uncomfortable, both for body and mind, yet it is better for our object that we be in such circumstances, than to have been so situated that we could have commanded the services and good-will of all around us. By being on what they consider a level with themselves, they have had free access to us, have laid aside reserve, have exhibited their faults, and thus have presented to our view much more of their real character than we should otherwise have seen. The contradictory accounts given by different travelers and voyagers among the same people, often arise from one person's having seen the favorable, and another the unfavorable side of things. The picture of a barbarous people drawn by a shipwrecked sailor, cast friendless upon their shores, and first stripped of his clothing, and then reduced to slavery, would differ widely from the representations given of the same people by a captain or supercargo going among them with a well laden and well armed vessel, and thus having, for the time being, all power to command their smiles and their kind treatment.

Today the chief imam called and requested us to visit a sick friend of his, a pangeran. We found him in the last stage of disease of the lungs. The manner in which the sick man was treated by those around him, the kind and delicate attention which was paid him, could not but be gratifying to our feelings; and had this been the only scene we had witnessed in Brunei, we should have come away with a favorable impression in regard to the character of the people. The imam, just referred to, desired me to present his compliments and thanks to a gentleman in Singapore, (Mr. Tracy probably,) who had given books and shown kindness to the people of Brunei.

Several of the sultan's men have been to the mouth of the river, and on board captain M's brig, to search for the Spanish boy before spoken of, who it seems has made his escape. They returned without having found him. With all my heart I wish him safe deliverance from bondage.

We had at length obtained permission of Hasim to go in his boat to our vessel in the morning, and were just putting our effects on board a gobang to go to Hasim's house, where we were to spend the night, and be ready for an early start. At this moment our captain arrived.

* * * * * *

The sultan finding that we were about to leave, changed his manner, professed the highest regard for us, and hoped we should not be displeased at him. At 9 o'clock in the evening we took leave, and at half past two we reached the vessel, the distance being not less than 20 miles. With a grateful heart I laid my head once more upon my pillow.

DUTCH POSSESSIONS ON THE COAST OF BORNEO.

From a Correspondent.

As early as 1608 the Company had already established several factories at the mouth of rivers along the west coast. But the natives being a very treacherous race, and dissatisfied with seeing strangers taking possession of their trade, extirpated one settlement after the other. It was not until 1770 that Abdul Rachman invoked the aid of the Batavian Government in order to carry his ambitious views into effect. To reward the Dutch for the services they had done him in subjecting the neighbouring princes to his sway, he ceded to them the territory of Succadana, Pontianak and Sevangoe. From that period the Company obtained a firm footing, and its territory along the coast was more and more enlarged. At present the following places constitute their colony. The states of the Sultan of Sambas, in the interior of which the goldmines of Semini and Lara are found; the territory of Mumpawa, containing the goldmines of Mantrado and Mandor, famous all over the east; Pontianak, the most flourishing settlement on the coast; the districts of Landak and Sangou farther in the interior; Simpang under the government of a native prince; Matan, formerly called Succadana, once famous for its trade, and acknowledging the prince of Bantam as liegelord; Kandawangan in the interior. Some of these places are more or less under the administration of petty Rajahs, but Dutch influence is greatly preponderating and their sway is extending. The whole population of all those territories amounts to 545,000, 380,000 of whom are Dayaks, 138,000 Malays and Bugis, and 27,000 Chinese. Their income was in 1822—278,417 guilders, and the public expenditure 479,440. Since that the revenues have become much larger, and if they not yet cover the expences, it is expected that they will soon be quite sufficient and even leave a surplus.

The colony on the South coast is of an earlier date. In 1733 the Dutch took formal possession of Banjermassing, which they have retained until this very hour. This colony yielded in 1822, 171,928 guilders, whilst it cost the Government only 134,828.

The Dutch have repeatedly come in hostile contact both with the Chinese as well as the Dayaks. The former maintain obstinately their independence, whilst the latter fight upon the instigation of their Malay lords. Two years ago a very interesting exploring expedition under the command of a Colonel proceeded into the interior, but the results are not generally known. This will however not be the last attempt, for it has been satisfactorily proved by several travelling mineralogists in the pay of Government, that the soil contains rich gold and tin mines, and no means will be left untried to fetch these treasures from the bowels of the earth.

DUTCH TRADE WITH JAPAN. The question has often been asked, whether it would be prudent and advantageous to carry on a commerce with a country, where so many restrictions press upon the enterprize of the merchants and the foreign residents are reduced to honorable imprisonment. But it appears, that there is sufficient profit to cover all disgrace and trouble, and therefore the factory is continued. According to the official account of 1822 the outlay was 718,642 guilders for the articles of trade; expences of the factory 115,452 guilders; sundries 473; Total 834,577. The receipts were, sundries 43 guilders, sale of the copper, camphor, lackered ware etc, 938,764 guilders; clear profit 124,230 guilders, a sum sufficient to indemnify two ships for visiting that distant country.

DECLINE IN OUR EXPORT TRADE AND THE CORN LAWS.

Last week we showed how our export trade was gradually falling off. The year 1837, as compared with 1836, showed a decline in the declared value of exports of £11,143,634. But if we look backward, we shall find that for several years our export has been on the decline, though not so much for any one year as that of 1837, which is accounted for by our monetary unhingement. This great decline, however, for one year is not so alarming as the regular and stated decline of this important branch of trade. And to what are we to look as the principal cause of this decrease of business? To the CORN LAWS, doubtless, which operate by a constant exclusion of foreign grain from our ports to prevent our manufactured produce from finding its way to foreign grain growing countries. The extent of mischief inflicted by these laws must be enormous; and every attempt to impress the landlords of the country with a sense of their injustice and mischief, so as to produce a modification of them, has failed. The landlords are sturdy in their resistance to every measure that has any possibility of being interpreted as hostile to the operation of these laws. COL. SEALE'S Bill for grinding foreign grain in bond in the government warehouses, to be exported within two months after ground, under heavy penalties, and British grain to an equal value being taken in its stead, has been thrown out of the House of Commons during the past week. Nothing could be guarded more than this bill was to prevent the Corn Law advocates from taking alarm, still after all they would not listen to it; and the most cogent reason they could adduce was, "that the agricultural interest was quiet, and did not wish to be disturbed." When we consider that industry is suffering and that trade is suffering, while this interest is enjoying its repose, reminds us of some poor wretches, prisoners in the East Indies, who were dying of thirst in the Black Hole, and yet the governor, who had the care of the water, and without whose permission they could not have any, was asleep, and must not be disturbed! This, if not very sublime, is very beautiful; and can be construed into nothing else than insult added to the injury the Corn Laws inflict. How long this great mercantile country will tamely submit to such oppression remains to seen. MR. HUME has moved for a return of all the places that have joined the Prussian commercial confederation, the amount of their population, and the dates when they joined. This confederation has arisen very naturally out of the Corn Laws; and when the return is made, we shall call attention to its particulars, and we have no doubt but they will show how great is the mischief inflicted on our commerce, and likely to be, by these odious regulations. English paper for May.

A FEW OBSERVATIONS ON THE TEA PLANT OF ASSAM.

From the report by M. C. A. Bruce.

The Tea plants in Assam have in general been found to grow, and to thrive best, near small rivers and pools of water, and in those places where, after heavy falls of rain, large quantities of water have accumulated, and in their struggle to get free, have cut out for themselves numerous small channels. The sort of land to which I allude will be perhaps better explained by means of a diagram. *

The dotted line shews the limit of the highest flooding. On the top of this land you must fancy a thick wood of all sorts and sizes of trees, and amongst these the Tea tree, struggling for existence; the ground here and there having a natural ditch cut by the rain water, which forms so many small Islands. The largest piece of ground that I have met with, I think was about 600 paces without a break. I also add a section of the little river Kahong, where the Tea plant abounds, exhibiting many small Islands, every one of which is covered with trees of various sizes, and the Tea among them; the land being never wholly inundated in the rains, though nearly so. This kind of land is called Coo-kah Mutty. I have never met with the Tea plants growing in the sun, but invariably under shade, in thick woods, or what we call treejungle, and only there, and in no other jungle whatever. It struggles for existence amongst so many other trees, that it becomes tall and slender, with most of its branches high up. The largest Tea tree I ever met with was 29 cubits high, and four spans round; very few I should say attain that size. I have taken great numbers of Tea plants from the jungles, brought them 4 to 8 days journey to my own house, and planted them in the sun, that is, without any shade; during the first six months the half of them died, at the end of the year about one quarter of what I had originally brought only lived; at the end of the 3d year there was still less; those that did live threw out leaves and blossoms, but the fruit never came to perfection. The plants I speak of were from one to three feet high; if they have grown any thing since they were transplanted, it has hardly been perceptible, either in height or thickness; many of them have had the advantage of a little shade from the trees in my garden, and those that had the most shade did look healthier than those that had none, and they threw out more leaves. I have often read and heard of the China Tea plant growing no higher than three feet; their being planted in the sun and their leaves constantly gathered. I think accounts for it. A short time ago I requested and got permission from Government to try some experiments in my own way. About the middle of last March, I brought three or four thousand young plants from their native soil in the Muttuck country, about eight days journey, and planted them in the tree-jungles of this place, eight and ten close together, in deep shade. From 4 to 300 were planted in different places some miles from each other; in the latter end of May I visited them and found them as fresh as if they had been in their native soil, throwing out fresh leaves. As these thrived so well, last June I brought from the same place 17,000 more young plants, and planted them in Coorkah Mutty, about two miles from this place in deep shade; they are now throwing out new leaves and thriving as well as could be expected, although the soil here is nothing like that from whence they were taken—in which point alone the places differ. To shew how very hardy they are I may mention, that they were in the first instance plucked out by the roots by the village people who were sent to bring them from their native jungles, put upright into baskets without any earth, brought two days journey on men's backs, put upright into canoes, a little common earth only being thrown amongst their roots, and were from seven to twenty days before they reached me; and then they had to be carried half a day's journey to the intended new plantation, and were four and five days with only a little moist earth at their roots, before they were finally put into the ground. And yet these plants are doing well; at least the greater part of them. I will give another instance of their hardiness. Last year the Government sent a deputation of three scientific gentlemen to examine the Assam Tea plant, Dr. Wallich, Mr Griffith, and Mr. McClelland,—the two former Botanists, the latter a Geologist. Dr. Wallich who conducted the deputation, requested me to accompany them, being the only European who had ever visited the Tea tracts, as the different localities are called. One day after having seen some Tea in company with these gentlemen, and as we were returning, I was informed by some natives of another patch or tract of Tea that had been cut down. We went and examined it, and found the plants just coming up, about 6 inches high. On enquiry we were told that the villagers took the Tea plant to be so much jungle, and therefore nearly cut all of it down close to the ground, and set fire to the whole, and then planted paddy or rice on the spot. The crop of paddy had just been cut and brought in; when we saw the plants, the shoots were coming up from the roots and old stumps, thick and numerous. Some Tea plants I noticed had only been cut a foot, and some two to four feet from the ground; all these threw out numerous shoots and leaves an inch or two below where they had been cut. I afterwards converted this piece of ground into a Tea garden on account of the Government, and now it is one of the finest I have; where there was formerly one Tea plant, there are now upwards of a dozen, the new shoots from the old cuttings forming a fine bush, and shewing a great contrast to some of the original trees, which I have permitted to stand, with slender trunks and a few branches only at the top. This tract or garden has yielded more Tea this season, than twelve times the same space of ground in the jungles would have done. I found that as the plants that had been cut down grew up again, the leaves acquired a yellowish tinge from their exposure to the sun, and were much thicker than those in the jungles; but this yellow tinge has worn off, and the leaves are now as green as those in the shade. As this tract answered so well by being cut down and set fire to, I tried the same experiment upon another tract close by, and it has come up to what I expected of it, eight to twelve new shoots having risen from the old stump, in the place of one. It is now a very fine Tea tract. Not knowing how this plan of cutting down might answer eventually, and how it might effect the plant, I took another tract in hand, allowed all the Tea plants to remain, but cut down all the other trees, large and small, that gave them shade, piled them up, and what I could not set fire to, I threw into the water courses. These Tea plants are doing well, but still each plant remains single, consequently has not many leaves, and is much in the same condition as when under shade. We have not had sufficient time to show what effect the sun may have on the leaves, and the Tea made from them. This tract has a curious appearance, the plants appearing hardly strong enough to support themselves now they are deprived of their friendly shade. I have some other tracts under experiment; some where I have permitted the jungle trees to grow, and only cleared away the brushwood and other small trees to admit the rays of the sun; others with very little shade. I have cut off branches of the Tea plants and laid them horizontally in the ground, with an inch or two of earth on them, and they have thrown out numerous shoots the whole length of the branch; other branches were simply pushed into the earth, and they have grown; but this was all in the shade. I do not think they would answer so well in the sun.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,—Being a very poor fellow and a simple, minded man, whose ideas do not rise above his business, I hope you will excuse the plain unvarnished way in which I relate to you the story of my griefs. I have received, Sir, great injury from the grand Hoppo of Canton and his ministers and they all refuse me satisfaction! I am ready to decide the question either in a boxing match or with my ell-wand, like a true English operative, as pistols make my blood freeze, and swords make me shiver. I would have no objections to fix a bill in chancery against my arch enemy the Hoppo, and (like a true born Englishman who loves fair play) give the d——d chinaman the advantage of "The Glorious Perfection of human reason," but I don't know that the superintendents have authority to settle questions of the kind, and the judge with the bigwig, now on his way out, will I fear arrive too late to redress my wrongs.

To come to the point Mr. Editor: a few days ago, I received my first consignment consisting of 2 Bales containing just 100 pieces of white longcloths known in this market as 66s and 72s. The Hoppo's minister, a strapping Tartar, full six feet high, dressed in blue crape, with a tirly wirly cap and button, and so ugly that he looked for all the world like an avatar of the evil one, classed my first consignment as 90 pieces No. one, and 10 pieces No. two! I thought "surely there must be some mistake in this" and got the linguist to intercede for me, but the big Tartar scowled and gave me a look that I translated "go to h—" you lousy English weaver!" Upon this I felt my English blood boil in my veins! my bunch of fives involuntarily curled up, and I told the linguist to give my defiance to the mandarin and tell him that "altho' surrounded by his followers, I'd waive every consideration as to time and place, and giving him all the benefit of his inches, decide this affair of honor on the spot;" The linguist soothed me with something that looked like reason, besides, just at the moment, the saying of "Catching a Tartar" occurred to me, else, I verily believe that my bones would have rattled on the mandarin's ivories! The linguist said "alla longcloth just now countee number one—cause number one number two just now alla same, number one pay one dollar duty, no hab got Consoo—inside, number two pay half dollar duty, —half dollar Consoo—truly countee alla same same!" Now I understood very little more of this than that two half dollars make a whole dollar, which is as plain to my humble capacity, as that one bob is equal to two benders. But, to make sure, I waited on the Hong-merchant, who said very nearly the same thing, only adding "my frend! your countee welly small pigeon—more better no so much bobbery!" and with this he bowed me out of his Hong in the civilest way imaginable!—With that noble spirit so worthy of Englishmen which will never suffer them to remain quiet under oppression, I got a friend to draw up a petition to the Hoppo stating the hardship of my case! In three or four days he brought me an answer to the effect "that the laws of the Hoppo were like the laws of the Medes and Persians, which never alter, that he, the Hoppo, was a just and upright man, that he had treated me with the utmost tenderness, and that I had better give him no more lip lest I might chance to catch the worst of it!" "Well" said I to myself "I'm blessed but this is like giving a dog a bad name, and killing him afterwards because he has it! I must go and seek advice from wiser heads than my own," so I went to a friend who is "old Canton" and laid my case before him. He said "that it is very true that No. 1. longcloth pays no consoo, whereas No. 2. longcloth does pay consoo, which brings the duties pretty nearly the same. There is, however, this difference, that if charged No. 1, the half dollar goes into the Hoppo's pocket, if charged No. 2, the half dollar goes into our own." My friend further expressed his wonder at the apathy of the foreigners generally, and at the Chamber of Commerce in particular, for said he, what is the case with your first consignment, is at this moment the case with every foreign merchant in Canton! Not only do they quietly allow this money to go into the Hoppo's treasury instead of into their own, but they allow the Hoppo just now to establish a precedent which he will be loath to give up, even when the debts of the bankrupt Hong-merchants shall be paid, and there shall be no occasion for continuing the Consoo charge! The Chinese have a proverb, "the first time we give it you as a favor, the second time you plead it as a right," and they are continually casting this in the teeth of the foreigners as a reason for granting them no favors. Why then cannot the foreigners retort it upon the Hoppo, especially when backed by the edict of the Vice-roy which expressly states that there are fixed laws and that there shall be no innovations! Now for my part" said my friend" I remember in the Company's time, all cloth of the 66 and 72 qualities used to be classed as No. 2. Three years ago, if cloth of this quality was taxed as 3 or 4 ps. of No. 1 and 6 or 7 ps. of No. 2, it was accounted enormously high; these facts are fresh in the memory of every Hong-merchant and foreign merchant in the place! But if the foreigners tamely submit to have this cloth taxed as No. 1, and leave the spiritless Hong-merchants to fight their battles for them, they will find the truth of the old saying

——"Facilis descensus Averni

"which being interpreted means, that it is a very "easy matter now to let the Hoppo go on increasing his charges, but if you sit by calmly and suffer it, you will find it no easy job to get matters brought back to their old footing!"

So spake my friend, and it seemed to me as if there was a little reason in what he said. It was certainly most consolatory for me to learn that others were in the same situation as myself! Only I felt annoyed at the insults heaped upon me personally! I have got a stomacher from a petty mandarin—a cross buttock from a saucy Hong merchant,—and my head is at this moment in chancery to the Grand Hoppo! and yet no satisfaction! no revenge! What would you advise me to do?

I am, Mr. Editor,

Your Humble Servant to command,

SHIRTINGS PIECE GOODS.

N B. The linguist who assisted me on the occasion was a regular goodun, and a very honest feller. I had him home with me when he took off a quart of Alsop without winking! This with me, was quite conclusive, for I have travelled a good deal, Mr Editor, and, blow me, if I ever know'd a cove who chinked the pewter like a gentleman, as turned out a rogue yet.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 8th Sept.

We have had several arrivals from Bombay and Singapore, as will be seen from our shipping report: The Mary left the latter port on the 23d of last month, but, though from a private source, we have received the Free Press Price Current of the 16th, our papers yet come to hand are of no later date than the 9th August. The Vansittart, we hear, spoke H. M. S Larne in about 16° North, but the latter had not succeeded as yet in hearing any thing of the fate of the Antonio Pereira.

From a notice circulated by the Chamber of Commerce we learn that the Co hong has through that body informed the community, that a security-merchants charge for a ship secured by him will in future be as follows, viz:

On Rice-ships	$	1,800
On Country-ships	,,	700 —
On Company's-ships....	,,	1,000 —
On American-ships	,,	700 —

This charge on Rice-ships is the whole of the harbour dues to which they are liable, they being, by imperial order, free from all duty, but the local authorities have contrived to levy, in various charges, the above sum. On the other three descriptions of ships the above charge made by the Hong-merchants is over and above the measurement dues and cumshaw, the former paid according to the size of the vessel, the latter being the same on all vessels and amounting to 1,600 Taels. The Hong-merchants charge covers linguist and compradore fees and a variety of other charges payable to petty mandarins. We suppose the class of vessels here called country ships to comprize all English or other vessels, whether from India or Europe, of less size than the ships formerly employed by the Company, and of which a number is still in this trade and retaining their old denomination of the Company's.

The Co-hong have also answered the letter addressed to them by the Chamber of Commerce complaining of the many grog-shops in Hog-lane, to which sailors are enticed, and getting there drunk in bad liquor, not only commit all kinds of noisy excesses, but also ruin their health. The Co-hong promise to exert themselves to shut up these shops.

We are informed that a new weekly paper, to be called "Buletin do Governo" is about to be published in Macao, subject to a Censorship. We hear that the Gentleman who was supposed to be the Editor of the Macaista Imparcial, has been appointed to the management of this new journal, which will be entirely under the control of the local authorities of Macao.

THE NEW CONSU TAX. Our readers will find, in another column, a letter from our correspondent SHIRTING PIECEGOODS, complaining of higher duties being now levied on white Cottons than have been customary hitherto, and that this extortion is partly owing to the manner in which the new Consu-tax is levied on these articles, for though No. 1 white cottons pay a dollar per piece duty, and No. 2 only 50 cents, yet they are in reality subject to the same payment, of a dollar each, for the Cohong levy half a dollar on the inferior, and nothing on the superior quality. The great difference is however that in one instance is the duty paid to the Government altogether, and in the other one half of it goes towards the Hong-yune or Consu-tax out of which the bankrupt debts are to be paid, and any unjust decision by rating as first quality the second of white cottongoods, is a fraud committed on the fund, and, through it, on the creditors of the bankrupt merchants. It is therefore of the greatest importance, that no such unfair decisions from the Hoppo should be submitted to, and if the promise on the part of the government, to expose musters of the different qualities at the Consu-house, has been complied with, there can be no difficultty whatever in the settlement of such disputes. But we fear that such musters, as was the case with the last thus deposited, would soon be used for the Hoppo's or his friends necessities, and the quality remain as open to discussion as before. The easiest way of settling what quality was meant to be number one, two, or three, would be to count the threads of a square of a given size and have their number registered. This may however perhaps be a new method to the Chinese, and therefore not palatable to them, to whom moreover an uncertainty in all such affairs must be more pleasing, as leaving more openings for extortion.

Being on the subject of duties, we are naturally led to review those lately imposed on the foreign trade by the Hong-merchants, by them called Hong yune (i e. Hong necessities). For the following statement as to their amount we are indebted to a gentleman who has taken much pains to get at the truth, and in which, probably he has been successful, though he does not vouch for their perfect correctness.

The following then is the tariff:

Tea	per Picul	T.	1,	4
Cotton	,,	,,	—,	6
Silk (Nanking)	,,	,,	7,
,, Canton	,,	,,	2,
White or gray Longcloths No. 3 p. Pc.		$	—,	25
White do ,, 2	,,	,,	—,	50
Longells	,,	,,	—,	50
Woollen-cloth	,,	,,	1,	—
Cotton yarn	per Picul	,,	3,	—
Pepper	,,	,,	4
Betelnut	,,	,,	—,	20
Tin	,,	,,	—,	75
Lead	,,	,,	—,	25
Ebony	,,	,,	—,	20
Sandalwood	,,	,,	1,	—
Sharks-fins	,,	,,	1,	—
Fish-maws	,,	,,	1,	50
Ivory	,,	,,	2,	—
Quicksilver	,,	,,	2,	—

On most articles this duty is equal to about 5 per Cent on the market value, but on Long cloths, No. 2, it amounts to 10 per cent, and to nearly that on the present value of Cotton yarn. On Iron also it is very high, whilst on Quicksilver again it is not 2 per cent. This duty falls heavy on Cotton, being nearly one dollar per Picul. The duty which will yield most is that on Tea, equal to 8 2 per Picul; thus estimating the whole annual exports at 400,000 Piculs, and they exceeded this in 1836-37, would alone give the large sum of $ 800,000.

The article of exports next in importance is that of RAW SILK, of which, taking the annual exportation of Nankin silk to be about 10,000 Piculs at 7 Taels or 10 dollars, the duty would be equal to ,, 100,000

CANTON SILK. 5,000 Piculs @ 3 ,, 15,000

Of Imports it may be estimated as follows.

COTTON 600,000 Piculs @ 6 m. ,, 502,000

COTTON YARN, 18,000 Piculs. @ 8 3 ,, 54,000

LONGCLOTHS, of which one half will probably come under the denomination of No. 2—say 70,000 Ps. ,, 35,000

Do., one quarter will be grey and No. 3 @ 25 cents ,, 8,000

WOOLLENS. Broad cloths and Spanish Stripes, say 60,000 Ps. ,, 60,000

LONG-ELLS say, 100,000 Pieces @ 50 cents ,, 50,000

Other smaller articles, such as PEPPER, BETELNUT, TIN, LEAD, EBONY, SANDALWOOD. IRON, QUICKSILVER, FISHMAWS, etc., will probably yield a duty of about ,, 125,000 for the Hong-yune duty, wherewith to defray the necessities of the Co-hong. This duty is, of course, independent of the regular imperial duties: the Hong-merchants call it a Commission, and say that out of it they defray the numerous calls made upon them by the Imperial Government and their servants, whose extortions, they say, amount to 700,000 dollars per annum. But even, if this be really the case, the residue is much larger than what they can possibly require for the payment of the bankrupt merchants debts, which do not quite come up to $ 400,000 per annum. Whether they mean that the Hong-expenses of their respective establishments are likewise to be paid out of it, we know not, but the excessive amount of the duty seems to hint at it;—moreover the name they give it, as their commission or remuneration seems to justify this supposition. It would therefore appear that the Hong-merchants wish to appear in their connexion with the foreign trade, as brokers only, content with a fixed percentage. That they should however continue acting as such the very narute of their establishment forbids, and as soon as they feel that either through the possession of property of their own, or of credit, they can control the market, they become speculators; and from their privilege are enabled to injure the foreign trade very sensibly. There can be little doubt but that the system of the Co-hong has an injurious influence upon the trade generally, and we heartily wish it's discontinuance. How this latter is to take place it is difficult to say, though of late the mode of transacting business with them seems to have somewhat changed; they are, generally, no longer trusted to such large amounts, neither by foreigners, nor the natives; this has caused them to confine themselves more generally to strict agency; their want of credit has brought a great many Chinese into contact with foreigners, and the trade carried on between them, undermines that of the Co-hong; and, finally their exposure to extortion and vexation of all kinds from the local auhorities renders it extremely difficult to keep their ranks filled up by any but such as have nothing to lose. We can therefore but repeat what we have attered many times before, that the Free-trade must, at no very distant period, subvert the bulwark which under the name of the Co-hong the Chinese have hitherto opposed to the more general intercourse between their nation and the white men from the west.

Thus giving a total of $ 1,750,000

What, however, we would recommend most particularly to our neighbours, is to watch the Co-hong in the collection and appropriation of the Consu-tax, that it may really be put to the use it is partly intended, viz. that of paying the creditos of the bankrupt hongs. It is in the recollection of most that similar Consu-taxes have before been levied for the payment of the debts of former Hong-merchants, but that it is generally understood now that, after paying those debts, the tax was continued to provide for the always increasing extortions of the Imperial court and the local authorities. The article alone of Ginseng for the court, which the Hong-merchants are obliged to provide, is a heavy sum; moreover, the repairs of the yellow river cost annually a very large sum; and many presents the Co-chong is besides obliged to send to Peking. The extortions of the local authorities are equally heavy, and, if any more barbarian eyes threaten the Provincial City with a visit, but little will remain in the fund wherewith to satisfy the creditors who have the only just claim upon it. It is said that the late military preparations, to repel the British squadron, in case it should attempt to force a passage up the river, have cost the Co hong upwards of 100,000 Taels. This expense, we presume, is still going on, we hear at least that the war-junks still remain at and near Macao to watch the motions of the British Admiral, who has, for some time, been quietly anchored at Tung koo Bay. The best way to prevent the fund being squandered upon objects with which the foreign trade has nothing to do, is, to press upon the Hong-merchants the necessity of making distributions among the creditors of the bankrupt hongs as soon as any sufficiently large sum shall have accumulated. This will prevent its being diverted for other purposes, and at same time compel the merchants to collect the duty in cash, instead of the former inefficient manner of debiting each Hong with the whole amount, but calling for payment only such quota as the expenditure of the year warranted.

THE LOSS OF THE RUBY. We mentioned in our last the circumstance of this vessel having foundered at sea, and having since seen the protest of the carpenter, William Crail, who with 35 lascars had left the ship in a boat, and was picked up by the Jupiter, we procred to give from it the following abstract. The Ruby passed Anjer on the 25th May, and about 20 days after, when, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the carpenter sounded the well, he found six feet water, though, when, as customary, he sounded in the foregoing watch the vessel had no more than 15 or 16 inches, her usual quantity. It became evident that she had sprung a leak, though the crew was unsuccessful in finding it. To keep the ship afloat, Cargo was thrown overboard, and the pumps were worked incessantly for five days and six nights, in hopes of reaching the Seychelle Islands, when at last the crew took to the boats, and abandoned the ship, which went down about half an hour after. Capt. Randle, with about 13 of the crew, took one of the cutters, while the mate, with the same number of men, took the other, and the carpenter and 34 lascars got into the long-boat. The boats kept together during the first three days, but parted company during bad weather then coming on, nor did the longboat's crew see anything again of the two cutters, and the latter were, as already said, picked up by the Jupiter, Capt. Elder, bound for Bombay, when about 180 miles to the eastward of the Seychelle Islands.

From the evidence of the crew it appears moreover that the vessel foundered on about the 20th June, about 900 miles to the eastward of the Seychelles Islands, and was going 8 knots an hour when her having sprung the leak was discovered. Hopes are entertained that the two cutters will have reached the Seychelles in safety. The loss of this vessel is likely to be severely felt in the bazar of Bombay, remittances in bullion having been made to native merchants there, many of whom are not insured. A few packages of gold leaf, altogether 43, landed by Mr. Crail is, we are told, all that has been saved of the valuable cargo unless Capt. Randle reaches land, he having also taken charge of a quantity of the precious metal. The whole loss of this vessel is estimated at about 9 lakhs of Dollars.

On Thursday last, at about 3 o'clock of the afternoon, during a very short thunderstorm, the lightning struck and killed a barber while engaged in his profession in the street Se-ying-ho. The razors and number of other iron instruments there people carry with them, probably attracted the electric fluid.

Statistics of France—Territory.—France extends 537½ miles in greatest length, and in greatest breadth 512½ miles; the circuit of her extreme boundaries comprises 2500 miles, and her superficial are contains 202 500 square miles, in which number are included 25,153 square miles of forest land.

Forests.—The most extensive forests are situated in the eastern and southern parts; in those provinces which are also the most fertile. Of the whole forest land of France, an extent of rather more than 4210 square miles is the property of the State; about 7120 belong to corporations and public institutions; 247 to the crown; 720 to the royal princes; and 12,162 to private individuals. In the forest thirty-seven kinds of trees are found; they grow to a height of between thirty and forty feet: only seven species are applicable to ship building and carpenter work. The yearly produce of all the forest land of France is valued at 4,000,000.

DIED.

At MACAO, after a brief illness, on the 26th ultimo, B. R. LEACH, Esq. a native of "Salem" (Essex County) Massachusetts, United States.

It must be a source of consolation to his bereaved relatives to know, that if the most assiduous attentions of friends, and the best medical skill could have sufficed to arrest the destroyer, they never would have been called upon to deplore his demise in a foreign land.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—Some sales of LONGCLOTHS have been effected during the week, both of Grey and White, but at about 10 cents decline on previous rates. COTTON YARN. The inferior descriptions are as unsaleable as ever; but there has been a little more inquiry within these few days for good yarn. CHINTZES; one or two small parcels have been sold within the week, of good quality and fair patterns at from 4½ a 5 $.

WOOLLENS.—The market for SPANISH STRIPES, is again a little more languid, the dealers for the present being fully supplied. LONGELLS, are also rather duller; for CAMLETS the demand appears to be reviving a little.

METALS.—LEAD is rather down but we have heard no sales of it or IRON.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER is advancing from the short supplies, and would now fetch 7½ $. BETELNUT cannot be quoted higher than 3 $. TIN continues the same; RATTANS rather lower.

RICE.—remains at it's former low prices.

COTTON.—In the Bengal and Madras staples, of which the stock is very small, there have been no transactions, but the nominal price is rather lower. Several sales of Bombay have taken place of the middling and inferior kinds at the previous low rates or rather under. The holders of the finer kinds, of which the supply is moderate, are firm for an advance; the present rates may be given at 9.3 @ 9 5.

OPIUM.—The principal demand for Malwa for the supply of the Junks having ceased, and the news of the advance having induced parties to send it on more freely, there has been a considerable decline, and sales to some extent have been made at 640 @ 650, and for a time it may be lower. Patna on the contrary is advancing, from the stock being short, and in few hands. Sales were made we belive yesterday even rather above our quotation for new Patna. For deliveries last month see above.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—There is nothing new to report. We do not hear of much more having arrived, and the holders are not at all inclined to relax in their demand for high prices.

TEA.—The only movement we hear of in the tea-market is a purchase of 2 chops of the new Caper at 21 and 25 Tales, the latter for 10 Catty boxes. The prices are about 20 per Cent above the rates at which the market opened last year, and fully 50 above those to which it subsequently declined.

THE CANTON PRESS.

VOL. 4. No. 2. Canton, Saturday, 15th September, 1838. No. 158.

ART. I. Notices of the city of Borneo and its inhabitants, made during the voyage of the American brig Himmalch in the Indian Archipelago, in 1837. From a Correspondent.

From the Chinese Repository, for August,

June 1st. At 10, A. M. pangeran Hasim, with 50 or 60 attendants and slaves, arrived. Captain F. arrived at the same time, and a scene occurred which must have made a most unhappy impression upon the minds of Hasim and the other natives who witnessed it. * * * * * * *

The Bruneans though troublesome enough on board the vessel, are far less so than on their own ground. Many of them are begging one thing or other; but usually one or two refusals silences, without offending, them. After drinking wine, for which they manifest a fondness (notwithstanding their Mohammedanism) those who before had too much sense of propriety to beg, waxed bold and became beggars like the rest. Even Hasim sent one of his men to request that I would give him a pair of pantaloons, a request which was readily complied with, as Hasim was a great man, and had never before asked for any thing, although he had received from us several pieces of nankin as a present.

June 2d. Persons on board most of the day trading, or talking about trading. They are excessively cautious and tedious in making a bargain, and their word is not to be relied on. They break their promisses, and then seem not at all ashamed of what they have done. They are not worse, however, in commercial transactions, than some who are called Christians. Indeed it must be admitted, to the disgrace not of Christianity or of civilizations, but of some who live under their protection, that there are persons in Christian countries who are in all respects worse than the people of Brunì.

June 3d. Before sunrise Kini Balu distinctly visible, N. E. ½ E., its well defined outline projected upon a deep red sky, distant more than a hundred miles. At sunrise we weighed anchor, but did not leave the port till the next day.

The question naturally arises, What is the origin of the people of Brunì? From what country or countries have they come? This question has often been proposed to the better informed among them, and the reply uniformly received has been, that the Brunians came from Johore. They further say that Menangkabau was the parent country of their race: that from Menangkabau the Malays emigrated to Johore, thence to Malaca, Rhio, Licuga, and Brunì, and from Brunì to Sambas and Matan. The time of this emigration we have no means of ascertaining except from the number of rajas that they reckon. According to one of the most intelligent pangerans, the numbes of rajas who have reigned in Brunì is twenty-nine. Another pangeran makes the number twenty-four, and others thirty Allowing fifteen years for a reign, which is probably sufficient in a country like this, we shall be carried back to about the year 1400 as the period when the Malays established themselves here. According to some of the pangerans, the Brunians derive their origin from two other sources besides Johore. One of these they call the banzsa Sirip (Sirip race) which came from the country Type, the other the bangsa China (Chinese race). They could give no information concerning the country which they called Type.

The government of Borneo proper, in theory, approaches near to a pure despotism, all power being supposed to rest in the hands of the sultan. And were the sultan a man of sufficient talent to make the most of the advantages of his position, and were the higher pangerans at the same time inferior men, his will would be the only will. But practically, the government is a feudal aristocracy, the power of the sultan and of each of the nobles depending upon personal ability, the number of dependents and slaves, and amount of wealth. In theory the government is hereditary also, but only partially so in fact. Much depends upon the qualifications and popularity of the different aspirants to the sovereignty. In the event of the present sultans death, there can be little doubt that Hasim would be his successor, although there are five persons whose claims on the ground of inheritance would stand before his, viz. two brothers, and Yusuf the sultan's uncle by the father's side. Hasim being his uncle on the mother's side. There seems to be nothing like a regular tax for the support of government. The sultan is supported partly by voluntary tribute, which is probably very small, partly by the privilege which he possesses of calling upon all persons for any labor or service which he may require, partly by the labor of his own slaves, and partly by traffic. The pangerans support themselves by traffic and the labor of their slaves.

The territory over which the sultan claims and exercises control, extends from the north end of the island to the district of Sambas, a distance of 50 miles, his authority being confined mostly to the coast. Formerly the territory of Brunì extended around on the eastern side of the island, into the strits of Makassar, embracing half the coast of the whole islands. The eastern coast was long since ceded to Sulu, and by Sulu to the English.

Of the number of inhabitants subject to Brunì it is impossible to give anything more than a guess. To put down a mere conjecture is undesirable, and yet it may be better than nothing in the absence of precise knowledge. The limits below which the population will not fall, and above which it will not be found to rise, may be fixed at 80,000 and 180,000 In this conjectural estimate the Morats (Dayaks), over whom the sultan claims authority are not included. The reply of the pangerans to all questions in reference to the amount of population, was: 'Allah tau, orang-ta'bulh bilang' (God knows, but men cannot count them). They seemed to have no definite conceptions of numbers beyond a few tens of thousands. They inquired as to the number of the English, and when told that their number is twenty millions, they said the subjects of Brunì are more numerous.

A large proportions of the inhabitants of the town are slaves. Many of these slaves have been purchased from the Illanun pirates. Others have been reduced to slavery in consequence of debt or crime. The ordinary price of a slave is said to be 50 dollars. The debasing effects everywhere attendant upon slavery, both on master and servant, are visible here. A middle class, consisting of the younger and weaker brothers of the chief pangerans, and of a few of plebeian birth, also suffer in consequence of slavery—being thrown out of employment, and made dependent upon their relatives or some great man to whom they have attached themselves.

Piracy does not now exist here, at least the subjects of the sultan, strictly so called, are not allowed to engage in piracy. The port, however, is open to pirates, who come here to dispose of their booty, and to obtain their supplies. Under the last sultan it was notorious for piracy. The present government have adopted a different policy, partly from fear of the European powers, and partly, probably, from a persuasion, on the part of Hasim at least, that commerce in the long run is more profitable. The very name of Singapore is a salutary restraint upon the people of Brunì. Having formerly assassinated a Dutch resident, and having in their piratical excursions captured and carried into slavery many of the inhabitants of the Philippines, they are thus by their bad character excluded from Dutch and Spanish ports, and Sinzapore is the only mart to which they dare resort For a few years they have taken, and will probably continue to take, some pains to preserve a fair reputation, in order that their commercial intercourse with Singapore may not be interrupted. The seeds of piracy, however, are still in their minds. With most of the inhabitants of the Archipelago, except the Javanese, piracy, especially when committed against white men and Christians, is popular, and it is too deeply wrought into their minds and habits to be easily eradicated. The influence of the Arabs, in connection with the treatment often received from men bearing the Christian name, has tended to foster this spirit of freebooting. The commerce of Brunì is carried on chiefly with Singapore, and employs 40 or 50 prahus. Besides the prahus, a country or a European vessel is occasionally seen here. Chinese junks have long since forsaken the port. The staple article of export is pepper. The quantity annually furnished is said to be about 4 0.0 peculs. Campuor of the best quality is obtained to the amount of a few peculs. The articles imported are cotton goo is, silks, brass wire, brass plates, iron, iron-cooking utensils, &c. Opium, by a wise prohibition of the government, is excluded. Only a very small quantity finds its way into the country by smuggling. All business is carried on by barter. Our vessel was well supplied with dollars, but no use could be made of them in tradi g. Pieces of iron are employed as coin in buying articles of small value, such as fruits and fish in the market. The small traffic of he market is chiefly in the hands of women, who meet together in their little canoes, sometimes in one part of the town, and sometimes in another. Comparing the statements of Leyden, Hamilton, Hunt, and others, with the present condition of Brunì, it would appear that commerce has declined during the last century. This would be the necessary result of such a government as that of the present sultan. According to Foster, as quoted by Leyden, there were seven Amoy junks at Brunì, in 1775. It was natural that the wealth of the Chinese should have tempted the cupidity of the government, and that their influence should have excited its jealousy, and then followed oppression and the ruin of the Chinese trade.

The Brunian exhibits some skill in manufactures. They succeed well in filagree work. Their krises (dirks) are elegant, and of superior temper. They make surongs of great beauty. But the article of most extensive manufacture is brass cannon. Large quantities of the Chinese brass coin called cash, have been melted up in making cannon. All the brass pieces in town, (most of which are made here) are said to be worth several hundred thousand dollars. Indeed the wealth of the place consists almost exclusively in cannon, krises, and slaves, so that a through change in the customs and character of the people, from wrong to right, would go far towards annihilating all that they now call property. Almost every householder is to some extent a manufacturer and a mechanic. He makes his own cloth, his own kris, his own boat, builds and keeps in repair his own house, and thus relies in a great measure upon himself and his dependents for every article which he needs.

Roman Catholic Religion in China.

It is now fifteen years since the Roman Catholic priests were banished from Pekin, and sent with all those who were discovered in the Chinese provinces, to Macao. Yet the French monks of the order of St. Lazarus, among whom there is no want of money, union, or enthusiasm, have been secretly labouring for the maintenance of the Roman Catholic Church in China, and their exertions have succeeded even beyond their own expectations. For some years they have annually sent two or three young priests to China, who quietly proceed to the headquarters of the Missions in the interior of the country, and join in the work of conversion. There are now Roman Catholic communities in all the provinces; and in many places there are public chapels, where service is performed uninterruptedly, since the mission have had the good sense to train native Chinese as priests. In furtherance of this subject, the mission have founded two seminaries; one of these establishments is for the southern provinces, and is situated in Macao, whence the Chinese candidates are sent to Manila, where they are ordained by the Archbishop. On their return they are sent into the interior of the country, where they live in the midst of their flocks as peaceably as ecclesiastics in Europe. The other seminary is in Tartary, beyond the wall of China. In this establishment the priests destined for the northern provinces and for Pekin, are educated; for, incredible as it may appear, there is in Pekin a Catholic community amounting to more than 24,000 members! There are at this moment two French priests in the community at Pekin; for the chief direction of ecclesiastical matters cannot yet be intrusted to the Chinese priests. The provincials are therefore always Europeans, though the necessity of averting the suspicion of the government obliges them to travel clandestinely, and often places very great difficulties in the way of the mission. Christian worship is publicly performed in many of the principal towns. In Tschingtufu, the capital of the province of Setchuen, Christians are interred in the church-yard and over their graves are erected crosses and other symbols of Christianity. The government, when not suspecting the presence of Europeans, observe the most perfect indulgence towards Christians. Christian communities, too, being generally remarkable for moral and peaceable conduct, are liked by the local authorities, who having once tolerated them are greatly interested in preventing their detection by higher quarters, because they would then be called to account for their previous want of vigilance. When, therefore, a community is once formed, it incurs very little risk of being molested. An additional guarantee of its security exists in the peculiarity of legal forms in China. The first attempt to establish a community are not very readily appreased, because the transport of suspected persons to the seat of the higher tribunal must be at the expense of the local authorities, who are therefore naturally disposed to wink at such matters, as long as they do not apprehend disturbance or publ c preachings, which might render them responsible. The reason why so little is known respecting the Chinese Mission is, that formerly the missionaries were chosen from among the most ignorant of the clergy, and on their return they were unable to write intelligible accounts of their proceedings. The Last rists, however, have seen their error for some time past, and have sent out persons who, in addition to the possession of theological knowledge, have, like the Jesuits in earlier times, passed through a regular course of scientific education. They have now in China astronomers, botanists, &c. from whom interesting narratives may be looked for. It may reasonably be expected that ere long the Roman Catholic Missions will recover the extensive influence which they enjoyed in former times. They have, indeed, already established themselves on a better footing than they have maintained since the expulsion of the Jesuits, and should they hereafter succeed in secretly forming a native Christian clergy, competent to dispense with the direct superintendence of European provincials, Christianity will undoubtedly make rapid and uninterrupted progress; for the government seeks to suppress it not on religious grounds, but because it is an instrument of European influence. This observation is sufficiently corroborated by the following curious fact. Some time ago the protestant missionaries distributed on the coast of Fokien 20.000 copies of Bibles, prayer books, catechisms, &c. translated into the Chinese language. These books were sent to the Emperor who immediately issued a very severe decree on the subject of the distribution of foreign publications. But, singularly enough, this decree made no mention of the religious books, and merely referred to some of the publications of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, consisting of treaties on geography, history, politics, &c. which had been distributed also with the bibles.—M. A FEW OBSERVATIONS ON THE TEA PLANT OF ASSAM.

From the report by M. C. A. Bruce.

I have the pleasure of furnishing a map which I have made of all the Tea tracts I have discovered. Since it was composed several more tracts have been discovered, which I have not had time to enter. It should be observed, that south from Suddeeah to the Debree river is generally termed Chyguah. South of Debree river is called the Muttuck country, as far the Burro Dehing river. South of the Burro Dehing, river is situated Rajah Purundah Sing's country. From the hill and river called Jowrah Poong, which is nearly at the source of the Debree river, to a place called Beesa, south of the above hill, on the Burro Dehing river, near the little river Juglow Pauney, is called the Singpho country, being all to the east of the above line. Now it will be perceived, that not a single Tea tract has been discovered north of the Debree river, and that they are all on the south side of it. The Muttuck country, which I have traversed most, appears to me to be one vast Tea country, and I feel confident that not one half of its Tea tracts have been yet discovered. The whole of the soil of the Muttuck country appears well adapted for Tea; I have taken particular notice of it, digging and examining it at every place where I have stopped. Great numbers of the Tea tracts have been cut down in sheer ignorance by the natives and converted into paddy fields. I know of three tracts, where the paddy had been collected, and the Tea plants had sprung up again; when these are neglected they all rise up into thick wood jungle. Several of these places have been pointed out to me by some of the old inhabitants. Almost every inhabitant of the Muttuck country know now the Tea leaf, seeing how much we prize it, and getting little rewards from me when they bring in a branch from any new tract. There is plenty of Tea in Rajah Purundah's country, but he is too lazy to trouble himself about it; he is not even acquainted with those places laid down in my map. I have lately heard of a very extensive tract in his country, said to be as large as a dozen tracts put together. Several tracts are 600 paces long and nearly the same in breadth, and others only 100; but they have not all been properly examined, and may prove much larger. All these tracts can be enlarged almost to any extent from he numerous seedlings that are found amongst the Tea plants, from the great number of seeds that can be collected every year, and from the immense number of cuttings that may be planted. With respect to the seedlings, I have sown numerous seeds at Suddeeah in the sun; many have come up and appeared to thrive very well for the first year, but there was an insect, the Mole Cricket I think it is called, which used to nip off the young and tender leaves, and carry them into a hole under ground near the root of the plant; and I never succeeded in getting one plant to live. But last year I sowed some seeds in my garden under the shade of trees and bushes, they have come up and are thriving very well. The seeds I sowed in the sun last year, in the Muttuck country, and in their native soil in one of my Tea tracts, have also come up and are doing well. The Tea tracts in the Singpho country are much larger than those in the Muttuck. The Singpho have known and drank the Tea for many years, but they make it in a very different way from what the Chinese do. They pluck the young and tender leaves and dry them a little in the sun; some put them out into the dew and then again into the sun three successive days, others only after a little drying put them into hot pans, turn them about until quite hot, and then place them into the hollow of a bamboo, and drive the whole down with a stick, boiling and turning the bamboo over the fire all the time, until it is full, then tie the end up with leaves, and hang the bamboo up in some smoky place in the hut; thus prepared the Tea will keep good for years. A good way further east they dig holes in the earth, line the sides with large leaves, boil the Tea leaves, throw away the decoction, put the leaves into the hole, which they cover over with leaves and earth, and then allow the whole to ferment; after which it is taken out, filled into bamboos, and in this manner prepared taken to market. There Singaphoe pretend to be great judges of Tea. All their country abounds with the plant, but they are very jealous and will give no information where it is to be found, like the Muttuck people. All the Singpho territories are overrun with wood jungle, and if only the under wood was cleared, they would make a noble Tea country. The soil is well adapted for the plant. Nearly three years ago I by accident left a few Singpho Peasants, which I had carried away, on the banks of the New Dehing, three days journey from the place where I had got them; they were discovered by some Singpho friends of mine and stuck into the earth; and there tehy are now growing, as if they had never been transplanted, and notwithstanding they were put in the shade The Singpho country is a fine one, but as long as that nation can get the Tea leaves from the jungles, they never will cultivate the plant; the country is thinly inhabited by a set of men, who are always fighting amongst themselves. The Tea is said to grow on the top of the Nagah Hills, marked in my map, South of Ningrew, on the banks of the Burro Dehing. All the Tea tracts laid down are in the vallies.

The above observations have been thrown together in a hurry, without much order. I therefore hope that allowances will be made for their imperfections. I may at some other time resume the subject if it is thought of any interest.

I was delighted with an observation of a Boston merchant who had made several voyages to China. He dropped a remark by his own fireside on the narrowness which causes us to conclude, avowedly or silently, that, however well men may use the light they have, they must be very pitiable, very far behind us, unless they have our philosophy, our Christianity, our ways of knowing the God who is the Father of us all, and the Nature which is the home of us all. He said that his thoughts often wandered back, with vivid pleasure, to the long conversations he had enjoyed with some of his Chinese friends on the deepest themes of philosophy, and the highest truths of religion, when he found them familiar with the convictions, the emotions, the hopes which, in religious New England, are supposed to be derivable only from the Christianity of the region. His observation gave me intense pleasure at the time I heard it; and now, though I have no such outlandish friends as the Chinese appear to narrow imagination, I can tell him, from a distance of three thousand miles, that his animating experience is shared by other minds.

Retrospect of Western Travel by Miss Martineau.

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT WESTERN.

The following appeared in part of our impression yesterday:—

BRISTOL KING'S ROAD,
TUESDAY, MAY 23, 12 O'CLOCK.

It is with the greatest satisfaction that I communicate to you the safe arrival of the Great Western steam-ship from New York here at half-past 10 o'clock this morning. Having lain in the Roads in expectation of her I had a full view of the majestic vessel immediately after her passing the Holmes (about 21 miles down the Channel) and nothing could exceed the beauty of her appearance as she gallantly breasted the waves; and although a smart breeze was blowing from the N. W., she sailed triumphantly along, whithout rolling in the slightest degree, or appearing to be at all affected by them.

At the time of the departure of the Sirius from New York, on the 1st, she had not finished discharging her cargo, and upon departing from New York quay, at half-past 2 o'clock p. m. on the 7th inst., upwards of 100,000 persons were assembled to witness her departure with bands of music, and a variety of steam-boats attended her to Sandy Hook, which she left at 5 o'clock, with 68 cabin passengers at 35 guineas each (the greatest number of cabin passengers which ever came across the Atlantic in one ship), upwards of 20,000 Post-office letters, and a cargo consisting of cotton for our new factory, indigo, silks, and miscellaneous articles. During her voyage home she encountered head-winds 9 days out of the 14, and on one occasion a severe gale, yet she accomplished 7½ knots during its greatest severity, with the wind directly in her teeth, and completed her voyage to King's-road in 14 days and 17½ hours, her engines averaging from 17 to 19 strokes a minute, and with a consumption of less than a ton of coal per hour.

You will regret to perceive in the file of papers which I send you, that a most awful fire has taken place at Charleston, consuming whole streets, and occasioning a loss of property to the amount of $3,000,000, and that the French fleet are blockading the Mexican ports. Among her passengers are Lady G. Duncan, Lord James Butler, and Colonel Webb, the editor of one of the New York papers.—The Times, May 24.

India.

Without praising ourselves after the fashion of certain of our cotemporaries, who deal not in any but the most authentic gup, we shall now proceed to inform our readers that we take it upon ourselves to assert for reasons which we will presently give, that there will be no war for the present, either on the North West Frontiers, nor in Burma, unless circumstances undergo a very material change, and that a totally different order of things from that now subsisting shall make itself apparent. With respect to our relations with the Nepaulese, the chances of war are less easy of calculation, but upon that point also we shall presently give such information and reasoning as the case demands. To begin with King Tsarawaddi. It is quite evident that all is quiet there, and that Major Benson has been well received. For that officer's orders were, that upon the slightest reason being given him, by the conduct of the Burmese, to suspect them of hostile designs, he was to send back the Steamer—now the Steamer has not came back—ergo, King Tsarawaddi and the Resident are on excellent terms.

With reference to the treaty with Runjeet, it would appear that that Prince has undertaken to put Shan Soojah on the throne of Cabul, but that he thinks he is strong enough to compass the business, without the aid of the British power; and that it is only in the event of the Persian or other forces coming to assist Dost Nahoused, or in the event of the enterprise presenting greater difficulties than now contemplated that he wishes to have recourse to British assistance; and this is the subject of the treaty now concluded by Mr. Macnaghten with Runjeet—at least this is we incline to believe its principle article,—and constitutes, we believe, what in diplomacy is called an alliance, offensive and defensive, under certain provisos, modifications and stipulations. In these two quarters therefore it is quite clear that for some time to come, we shall have no war.

The Nepaulese question is not so easily settled. They have on foot an army of 40,000 fighting men, that is, their army is on the war establishment—they have occupied all the passes into their country, and have in fact assumed towards us, what is called, a threatening attitude. This for reasons of our own we think cannot be permitted by the British Government. Our army being on the peace establishment, and our relations with the Nepaulese being on an amicable footing, we have thought it necessary only to place our force on that frontier, on the pence establishment. It becomes necessary now, in consequence of their having placed themselves in a warlike attitude, to put the question to them as to their intentions, and they must either reduce their force, or we must encrease ours. The simplest and cheapest expedient will be to make them reduce their army—which must be done either by coaxing, or by cudgeling, and upon the persuasive powers of our resident, will, in a great measure, therefore, depend the mode in which this question is to be settled—for our own part, we love the Nepaulese, and we hope, that the good sense and good feeling of their Sovereign, will enable him to see the propriety of his putting his force on a footing more conducive to the maintenance of that harmony, which has so long, and ought always to submit between the two Governments.

Our Nepaulese ally has nothing to gain in a war with us. There is no chance of a general disturbance; the North Western Frontier is well cared for, and the Burmese King is quiet. The Nepaul Sovereign therefore will consult his interests in tranquility.—Calcutta Courier, July 31.

Trade of Bengal.

We have been furnished with a copy of Mr. Bell's "Comparative view of the external Commerce of Bengal, during the years 1836-37 and 1837-38," full of valuable information both to the merchant and the financier.

It is satisfactory to notice that the effect of the commercial crisis, which so powerfully affected Europe and America last yearr, have not fallen very conspicuously on the trade of Calcutta, as far as the aggregate amount of exports and imports to and from all countries is concerned. In 1836 37 the total value of imports of merchandize and treasure was

	Co's Rs.	3,72,65,602
Increase, ...	,,	34,33,903
The total value of Exports was,
1836-37 .....Co.'s Rs.		6,70,71,409
1837-38..	,,	6,50,45,359
Decrease, ...	,,	20,31,450
Net total increase on Exports and Imports.....		14,02,452

The result would have been against 1837-38 had imported treasure been excluded from calculation. In this item the increase has been very great.

In 1836 37, the value was,	Co's Rs.	64 48,495
Increase,.....Co.'s Rs.		83 93,104

Of course the countries with which our commercial relations have principally decreased in 1837-38, as compared with 1837-36, are the United States and Great Britain.

In Imports the decrease with Great

Britain is	....Co's Rs.	98,09,881
United States.....	,,	3,05,866
Exports—Great Britain,	Co's Rs.	14,87,744
United States.....	,,	22,91,583

The whole decrease with Great Britain is,..... ..... Co's Rs. 29,97,625 and with United States..... Co's ,, 25.96,448

but the proportionate falling off is more serious with the latter than the former, inasmuch as the trade with Great Britain forms 56 per cent. of the whole import trade and above 37 per cent. of the whole export trade.

We could pursue our extracts to a much greater length, were we not fearful of depriving Mr. Bell of the fair reward of his labours; but we can truly say, no mercantile man, nor indeed any person desirous of ascertaining our commercial progress and the amount of revenue realizable from the customs department should be without a copy of this valuable work.—Harkaru July 7.

Honoluln.

From the Sandwich Islands Gazette.

Honolulu, the principal town and sea-port, in the Sandwich Islands, is situated on the S W. side of Oahu, and is in Lat. 21° 18' N. and Lon. 158° 1' W. The harbour is one of the best in the Pacific Ocean, and is accessible to vessels drawing not more than 24 feet. It affords good anchorage for at least 100 ships, and is defended against the action of the sea, and strong southerly winds, by a coral reef. Occasionally, the strong N. E trades cause vessels to drag from their anchorage, but no serious injury has resulted from this, nor is any likely to result, even in case a vessel should be driven as far as the reef; in as much as this is lined on the inner side with a mud bank. The harbor is protected by a fort of 34 guns, built upon a point which projects from the main land. But this fort, though it commands the channel and the outer road-stead, may itself be commanded by a fort of 14 guns, situated upon Punch-Powl Hill, at an elevation of about 550 feet, above the sea, and about ¾ of a mile distant from the lower fort. Honolulu is built on the western extremity of a level plain, which streetches some four or five miles along the shore, and from half a mile to one and a half miles inland, where it is met by hills, which, rising gradually at first, finally terminate in a range of mountains, which stretch across the interior, in a direction nearly parallel with the north-east side of the island. The town is about three quarters of a mile in length, and a half in breadth, and has been built up with very little of order or regularity. We are happy to state, however, that the governmeant are now taking prompt and efficient measures to improve the general appearance of the place. Several straight and broad streets are being opened through the town, to take the place of the narrow, and crooked, and filthy lances, which have heretofore been, at once, a serious inconvenience and a disgrace to the town. One of the streets is to be extended to the valley of Nuuanu; and soon, it is hoped, will reach as far as the Pali of Koolau. The houses of the natives are constructed, principally, after the common fashion of the country—upright poles covered with dried grass. A truly commendable spirit of improvement is exhibited, however, in this respect by many of the natives, who have adopted the stile of building introduced by foreigners. Some few of the houses erected by foreigners are wood, or are constructed of coral stone, an excellent material for buildings, and found at hand, in an exhaustless a bundance. But the larger proportion of buildings occupied by them, are constructed after the style of building which prevails extensively on the coast of Spanish America. The common soil is mixed up with dry grass and made in moulds into bricks, (called adobe,) of a large size; usually 18 inches or two feet long, one foot wide, and six to eight inches thick. These are dried in the sun, and are then laid up into walls. * As there is no frost to heave the ground, and no long continued rains, to destroy the bricks by accumulated moisture, walls constructed in this manner are very durable, and when plastered with lime and sand, as they usually are, present an appearance of singular neatness and comfort. The whole number of houses occupied by the natives, is probably about 600.

The native population of Honolulu proper, is about 6.000. The population of the Ahupuaa, or whole district, is about 9 000. The district of Honolulu, extends from Cewalo, on the east, to Kapalama, on the west; and from the sea to Nuuanu, north and south. Kewalo is the site of a house built a few years ago for the king, a short distance bo the right of the road leading to Waikiki. Kapalama is district commencing some 15 or 20 rods beyond the creek, on the west end of the town. The suburbs thus confined, contain about 3,000 inhabitants. The entire foreign population of Honolulu may be estimated at about 350—400: say 200 to 250 Americans, 75 to 100 Enulish; 30 to 40 Chinese; and a small number of French, Spanish, Portuguese, and from various other countries.

* This illustrates very clearly, the mode of making bricks and of building in Egypt, and the eastern countries. See Exodus, Chap. V.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 15th Sept.

Capt Warden, of the Ariel, has favored us with the following particulars: spoke the Cowajee Family in Calcutta river, on the 6th Aug., with loss of topmasts—all well. The Eliza had left Calcutta before the Ariel, which latter passed her in the river. The Bolton, Sir Edward Ryan, Virginia, and Imogene, all from Calcutta, had arrived at Singapore. The Ariel spoke the Syed Khan on the 24th August off Pareelar Hill.

Capt. Lyon of the Sir Charles Malcolm reports his arrival in Anjer roads on the 16th Aug. and that of the Thomas Lowrie on the 13th, of the Anna Maria and Bombay Castle on the 14th, and of the Bonanza on the 15th.

We notice the arrival in England of the following. From China Dankbarheid passed Dover 23d May: Eliza Siew art, off Falmouth. Abercrombie Robinson off Isle of Wight. From Singapore: Orissa and Ann.

By the Ariel from Calcutta, 9th August, and Singapore 28th, papers from the former city up to the 5th have been received. By some it seems to be thought that a war with some of the native powers is unavoidable. We have recopied an extract from the Calcutta Courier who considers things to wear a more peaceable aspect, though he also thinks the position taken by the Nipalese to be threatening. They have, it seems, 40,000 soldiers and may give the Company a good deal of trouble, and should a war there break out, military operations will necessarily approach the Chinese or rather Tibetan frontier, and cannot fail to rouse the attention of the Chinese, between whom and the Nipalese diplomatic intercourse has existed for some time, and the latter may be tempted to invoke the aid of the former, though from the reluctance with which the Chinese Government have of late years entered on foreign wars, it is probable that they will quietly look on. This war may however cause British merchants here and their trade to be more narrowly watched than before.

By the Alexander Baring from Liverpool 26th May, London papers, to the 25th have been received. These represent the commercial affairs of the country to be somewhat improving. The two great steamboats the Syrius and Great Western had returned from New York, the former in 17 and the latter in 14 days, bringing advices from that City to the 8th May, according to which several banks had resumed specie payments, but the United States Bank not yet. The money affairs in the United States are represented as being rather more favorable than before, but the discount upon all notes from the west continued very great.

The French after an unsuccessful negotiation with the Mexican Government, for an indemnification of 600.000$, for losses alleged to have been suffered by French subjects, throughacts of the Mexican government, and for satisfaction for insults offered to the person of the French Minister, Baron Deffaudis, have blockaded the ports of Veracruz and Tampico, with a flottilla of 1 Frigate and 4 brigs of war, which was expected soon to be considerably reinforced, threatening not to raise the blocade until their demands are complied with. The Mexican President has issued a manifesto in which he declares his resolve not to treat with the French until the blocade shall have been raised. It is fortunate for the Mexicans that their quarrels with the United States are for the present so far settled, as to have mutually agreed to have their differences arranged by an Umpire.

Prince Talleyrand died at Paris, 83 years old, after having, by penance and submission, made his peace with the Roman Church, of which he was a bishop before the Revolution. His funeral has been magnificent.

The Irish Poor Bill was read in the Lords a second time on the 22d May. The bill for the immediate abolition of the apprenticeship of the negroes in the Westindies, which was thrown out in the Commons, has again been brought forwrad and carried by a majority against ministers. Lord Brougham stated in the House of Lords that within a few days he had received no less than 250 petitions to that house in favor of the bill.

The London Mercantile Journal of 22d July has the following:—"Advices from Canton to the 31st January have arrived, but they communicate nothing fresh watever, relative to trade in contradistinction from the last accounts. The Chinese Government, finding that the prohibition of opium is counteracted by smuggling, have agreed to admit it on paying a certain rate of duty, and the whole of the business in this commodity is to be under the sole management of the Hong-merchats".—Such erroneous information, coming from a paper which, on most commercial matters, is considered a good authoritiy, is likely to mislead people in England. The legalization of the Opium trade, as far as we or we believe our neighbours know, is a distant as ever, nor is there perhaps much probability of its ever taking place, for, though a party at the Court seems to be favorable to it, the opposition has been very great, and elicited from time to time, not only memorials from censors against the measure, but also Imperial edicts approving their views of the matter.

By the late arrivals we have received Singapore papers to the 23d August, of which we give some extracts. The Penang Gazette of the 11th has likewise reached us, and also, by way of Java, we suppose, the Sandwich Island Gazette to the 26th May, of which we have embodied a few articles in our columns.

Kin-qua Affairs.

Tang, President of the Board of War, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces &c. proclaims to the Senior Hong-merchants for their full information: On the 21st day of the 7th moon, of the 18th year of Taoukwang, Nanabhoy Framjee and others petitioned as follows:

"We, the foreigners, before petitioned your Excellency, urging our claims against the Teenpo Hong, when Y. E., for which we shall be ever grateful, was pleased to direct the Hong merchants to meet together and consult; and report to Y. E. the result of their deliberations, that you might pursue the necessary measures; and on the 11th day of the present month, we received the following Edict from Y. E."

"'I have examined into the subject of Kinqua's debts to foreigners, and find that Dent and others have before petitioned, when I directed the Hong-merchants to meet together and consult, and report to me the result of their deliberations, that I might act accordingly. Now it appears from their report that Dent and others in obedience to my order, had consented to the arrangement that the principal of their claims should be paid in ten years, and the interest after the expiration of that period: but that Nanaboy insists on obtaining interest at the rate of 12 per Cent. per annum, which interest is to be paid up regularly with the principal. In consequence, the Hong-merchants again met together to consult, but the said foreigners (Nanaboy &c.) continued obstinately deaf to all conviction, when it appears Dent and the others also turned round for similar terms, notwithstanding his former agreement. ——— It appears to me that the first great object of merchants is to amass riches:—failing which, to avoid losses. Kinqua of the Teenpo Hong contracts debts to foreigners, and is, of himself, totally unable to liquidate them: there is consequently no prospect of their being repaid:—but the other Hong-merchants, mindful of the respectability of their class, come forward with the assistance, in the shape of an annual sum of 100.000, to enable him to pay his debts, that the foreigners may not be without a guaranty for their claims. Thus the money, which was as lost, is, by their assistance, regained; and the foreigners extremely fortunate."'

"'Now Dent and the other Creditors whose claims amount to upwards of $ 800,000. have, in obedience to my orders, agreed to the arrangement of paying the principal in ten years, and the interest after the expiration of that term, thus evincing a most reasonable disposition; but Nanaboy, &c. whose claims do not exceed $300,00, insist upon being paid interest at the same time as the principal. The principal creditors of the Teenpo Hong, evince their reasonableness by an early acquiescence in my views, while the minor creditors obstinately withhold their concurrence, by which they evince the boundless avarice and meanness of their dispositions, and set all principles of reason at defiance — Considering the circumstances, I again issue an edict, that they (Nanaboy and others) may ponder o'er its contents and awaken to a sense of their errors. Let the Hong-merchants forthwith explain its contents to the said Nanaboy &c., and impress upon their minds the unreasonableness of their demand for interest: let them at once concur in the arrangement of Dent and the others, that the principal be paid in ten years and the interest after the expiration of that term. There must not be two plans for liquidating these claims. Let the Hong-merchants be unceasing in their endeavours to support the Teenpo Hong and let them not relax their former kind efforts. Their attention must be unceasing to this matter, and let not the foreigners again pester me with their petitions, 'This is of the first importance.'"

Our Parsee Neighbours, on receiving this answer, again addressed the Vice-roy, urging as a plea for the preference to be given to their claims, their being not so wealthy as their English neighbours, and, consequently, unable to wait ten years for the repayment of their claims on the Kin-qua hong. To this the Vice-roy answers:

"This coming before me, the Governor, I have examined, and find by the records that I have already clearly signified my pleasure on this subject for the guidance of the foreigners. Nevertheless Nanabhoy &c. persist in their obstinate disobedience. Why does not the debtor Leang shing he of the Teenpo Hong exert himself in this matter? Why does not he, in cojunction with his brother Hong-merchants, meet together and form some arrangment for quieting the said Nanabhoy &c.

"It appears by the petition of Nanaboy and others that they are poor and distressed, while Dent and the others are wealthy: and that large sums are due the latter, while only trifling ones to the former; and they consequently earnestly entreat that interest may be allowed them, and a shorter period allowed for the payment of their claims, and they pester me with their noisy and clamorous petitions. Is the recovery of a debt so very important a business, that they presume, notwithstanding my repeated orders, to trouble me with their petitions? Do they think that I, the Governor, have nothing to do, but to attend to them? Truly I am very indignant at such behaviour.

"I have now directed the Namboy-yune to take the said Hong-merchant Kinqua into his custody and there cause him to make some arrangement respecting these debts, and report same to me for my consideration, when he may be released.

"In order that I may not again be pestered with petitions, I issue this edict. When it reaches the said Hong-merchants let them transmit and explain its contents to Nanabhoy &c. for their information and obedience. Do not oppose. A Special Edict."

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—Sales to some extent have been effected during the week of grey LONG-CLOTHS, and the market has declined a little more, the dealers hands being quite full. COTTON YARN. There has been some little enquiry for yarn of low numbers, say 16 @ 26 for the Chinchew market, and we hear 30 @ 32 $ has been offered for some of good quality, but we do not believe any actual sales have taken place

WOOLLENS.—The demand for SPANISH STRIPES is not brisk, but sales could be effected at our quotations according to quality. LONGELLS, are, if any thing, rather firmer, except blacks which are very low

METALS.—continue without much alteration.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER still in good demand, from the short supply. BETELNUT is also arriving more slowly than was expected, and the importation per Layton has been sold in consequence, we hear, deliverable at Macao @ 3¼ $.

RICE.—has further declined nearly 10 cents.

COTTON.—Quotations continue much the same, but the demand is languid, and sales can only be effected of small lots of 100 @ 200 bales, in which way perhaps 1000 bales of Bombay have been got rid of during the week A small parcel of Bengal of good quality fetched 11 T., there being very little in the market. In Madras we hear of no transactions.

OPIUM.—The brokers generally have taken alarm at the seizure of many of the small dealers and smokers, being doubtful to what extent the authorities will proceed, and they have been eagerly forcing sales of their previous purchases, which, being principally in Malwa, it has declined considerably, and, we believe some has been sold as low as 580. Patna is better supported, but the prices of all at present must be considered nearly nominal.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—One or two more small parcels have come down, but nothing has been done as to purchases, the holders still demanding exorbitant prices.

TEA.—There is nothing yet doing, and our quotations for the present are altogether nominal.

Dutch Possession on New Guinea.

From a Correspondent.

Of all the islands of the Indian Archipelago none is so imperfectly known and has attracted so little notice as the extensive territory of New Guinea.

Though in the neighbourhood of the Moluccas, which have for more than two centuries been in the possession of the Dutch Company, a government welle stablished, and, at the commencement, desirous of making new discoveries, yet neither the merchant nor traveller have thither directed their way. The early Arabian navigators touched frequently at the Northwest coast, and described the aborigines of the interior as fond of human flesh. Thus they were not very anxious to penetrate into the conntry, and as the poor natives could offer very few articles for trade, they soon left off visiting this coast. Antonio Ambrese arrived here in 1511 in a Portuguese vessel and was followed in 1530 by Meneezes. Thus Spaniards had at first in contemplation to form there a permanent settlement, and orders had for that purpose been sent out to Mexico, but the hostility of the natives, a race of untameable savages, prevented the execution of this plan. When the Dutch Company took possession of the Moluccas, they had to sustain a dreadful struggle with the Portugese, and then with several of the native princes. But when these islands were in a state of tranquillity. Pool, a commodore of the Colonial fleet, built at Ounien, on the Northwest coast, a fort. Two years later an expedition under Dortsman reached the coast, and his discoveries were so important as to induce the celebrated navigator Tasman in 1644 to take a nearer view of the country. But these settlements were never sufficiently supported, and the few Europeans who lived in them became either a prey to infectious diseases or fell into the hands of relentless savages. It was therefore found advisable to fix some stations on the surrounding islands Wammer, Maykor, and Oudjier, where the natives were less bloodthirsty, and the sandalwood of the forests would repay the expenses. These attempts however, also failed, and during the middle of the last century not a single trace of them was left. Under such circumstances, no more notice was taken of this country as if it had been thousands of miles distant, until the Governor, Van der Capellen, in 1824 sent thither an exploring expedition during his visit in the Moluccas. Of this voyage no full account has yet been published, but the results have been such as to induce the King of Holland, six years later, to declare the whole island a Dutch possession. A fort has been built at the nearest point, but the expenses of the settlement are considerable whilst it gives no returns; the number of soldiers being very soon reduced by diseases, new reinforcements are constantly necessary. The soil around the settlement itself it unproductive, though there is not the least doubt that, if this land were properly explored, it might equal in fertility the western islands. The natives of Banda, Gilolo, and the adjacent isles carry on a traffic with the aborigines, who themselves possess frail barks with which they visit the neighbouring islands as far as Bally. Their wants being very few, the whole commerce is confined to a few piece goods and beads, whilst the returns consist in gold dust, shells, birds of paradise, and other productions of the island, in very limited quantities. Though the Papuan races have gradually dwindled away, or retired from the coast to the jungle, the Malays have never yet been able to effect permanent settlements. What immense treasures for the botanist and mineralogist does this spot contain, and how rich would be the harvest which an intelligent traveller might collect! if the treasures lavished in war and bloodshed were used for ameliorating the state of mankind and opening new resources for trade, and fresh scenes for civilisation, New Guinea might also have obtained its share, whilst even at the present enlightened age, it remains a dreary jungle, the fit abode of wild beasts and savages.

INNER PASSAGE FROM SYDNEY TO TORRES STRAITS,

Ship John, August 24, 1837.

I SEND you a copy of our log * through Torres Straits, which will interest you.

It shows that the passage through the "Inner Channel" is not attended with more delay than the outer, as we spoke the "Runnymede" and "William," at Booby Island, both of which vessels sailed from Sydney a few hours before us, on the 8th.

We anchored four times, and I am satisfied that it only requires a good look-out to effect a speedy and pleasant passage through the inner channel.

We found no hidden dangers which are not marked on your charts so clearly that, together with the sailing directions, a very ordinary navigator could take a ship through without the chance of accident. The masters of the "John" and "Adam Lodge" have declared to me their determination to adopt it in future, and speak indignantly of the representations of fancied dangers and delays which were made to them at Sydney, and are very glad to have had an opportunity of judging for themselves. The dangers, as I have before said, are accurately laid down, and are all pointed out in the charts. I need not speak of delays, from what I have already mentioned, when we arrived off Booby Island, on the morning of the 21st, and left the Heads of Port Jackson on the evening of the 8th, at six o'clock.

I think it proper to mention to you, that Captain Whyte, in standing into the proper anchorage laid down at Turtle Island, stated to me, that he carried eight fathoms just inside the island, when it suddenly shoaled to four and a half, that he hauled out immediately, and anchored six miles from the island, in five fathoms, where it is laid down ten. The Rattlesnake anchored about four miles and a half from the island with breakers and sharp-pointed rocks, appearing through them about half a mile from her starboard side. In troop ships, at this time of the year, there can be no question which is the most desirable passage of the two; the weather throughout the time we passed has been fine, with strong fair winds, tending much to our comfort in many ways. I hope from our extraordinary success, independently of the dangers to which troops are exposed in the outer channel, from which there is no relief if the transport strikes on the Barrier Reefs, that all future tenders for conveyance of troops to the northward, will meet with the same considerate attention as ours did from Sir R. Bourke, in making the inner channel one of the provisions."

J. F. M.

[The question whether the passage to Torres Straits from Sydney shall be made inside or outside of the Barrier Reefs, has frequently occupied our attention; and considering the arguments both for and against each that have been advanced by our correspondents, our readers have no doubt long since decided that the certain security, and smooth water of the inner track, is preferable to the great risk of meething with bad weather with the reefs to leeward, which attends the outer one at the very time of entering the reef. A vessel may have made a good passage outside, with fine weather, and at the very time that a continuance of the latter is wanted, boisterous weather has come on, preventing an observation from being had to enable her to bear up for one of the passages through, and wreck has ensued. Loss of time has been advanced as an important objection against the inner route, but this has been shown to be erroneous; and the preceding letter, from an officer of Her Majesty's service, to Captain King, at Sydney, tends to confirm the advantages of this route over the outer one.—ED. Hawaii.

From the Hawaiian Spectator, April 1838.

The height of the mountains of Hawaii has been variously represented by different travellers. The elevation most commonly assigned to them, has been about 15,000 or 16,000 feet. By a series of observations made in 1834, by the late Mr. Douglas, he found the elevation of Mauna Kea, to be 13,764 feet, and of Mauna Loa to be 13 430 feet, above the level of the sea. These were the results of a great number of observations, both trigonometrically, and with the barometer, and may be relied upon as correct.

The ascent of Mauna Kea is, comparatively, an easy task, and has been frequently accomplished; but greater difficulties are met with in ascending Mauna Loa. The attempt was made by Ledyard, who accompanied Capt. Cook in his third voyage; and it has been frequently made by subsequent travelers. Mr. Goodrich was the first to accomplish it, and to discover the enormous crater, on the very summit of the mountain. His visit, however, was too hurried to allow him to make any particular observations; and it was left to Mr. Douglas to ascertain the dimensions and depth of the crater, as well as the height of the mountain. The following extracts from his correspondence, will not be deemed uninteresting, as we are not aware that his observations have been published. Mr. Douglas ascended Mauna Loa in Jan. 1834.

"The summit of this extraordinary mountain is so flat, that from this point no part of the islands is seen, not even the high peak of Mauna Kea, nor the distant horizon of the sea, though the day was remarkably clear. It is a horizon of itself, of about seven miles diameter.

After proceeding to the N. W. for the distance of 2¼ miles, at 2 o'clock the great terminal volcano of this curious mountain burst on our view. We came on the S. E. side, and from this part attempted to reach the black ledge, but finding the fissures hid by the snow, prudence, after having sunk twice to the arm-pits, dictated to me to return. This I regretted exceedingly, as I was prevented from measuring accurately its extraordinary depth. From this point I walked along the high ledge on the east side to the bump of the mountain, the point which appeared from Mauna Kea to be the highest.

On the brink of the ledge the wind whirled up from the crater with such furious violence, that I could scarcely stand 20 paces from it.

The circumference of the black ledge, or nearly circular crater, is, as near as my circumstances would allow me to measure, six and a quarter miles. The outer ledge, which represents the extent of the ancient crater, is about 24miles: the depth of the ledge, from the highest part, from accurate measurement with line and plumb, is 1270 feet. It appears to have filled up considerably all round. That part, to the north of the circle, appears, at no remote period, to have undergone the most violent activity; not by boiling and overflowing, or by discharging under ground, but by throwing out stones of immense size, and for the distance of miles around its opening, ashes and sand. Terrible chasmage in the bottom; in some places it is as if the mountain were torn asunder to its very bottom. No termination of this depth is seen by a good glass in an intense sun, and all clear. There is no smoke.—Terrible indeed must have been the sight, when in a state of action!

The part on the south side of the circle, which has evidently been the outlet of the lava, perhaps to an infinitude of overflowings, has enjoyed a long state of repose. Were it not for the dykes on the north and west sides, which show the extent of the ancient caldron, and the direction of the lava, together with its proximity to the existing volcano, it has little to arrest the attention of the naturalist.

To day from 8 till 9 o'clock, while passing ledges of the lava of a more compact texture, with small but numerous vesicles, the temperature of the air being 36° to 37°, the sun shining powerfully, a sweet musical sound was heard coming from the cracks and small fissures, like the faint sound of musical glasses, but at the same time having somewhat of a hissing sound, like a swarm of bees: this, in a lower region, might be overlooked as the sweet humming of insects but, in this high altitude, is too powerful and remarkable to escape the attention.

Near the top of the mountain I saw one small bird, about the size of a common sparrow, of a light mixed grey color, with a faintly yellow back, perched on a block of lava —the only animal that came under my notice above the region of vegetation, save a dead hawk, which I found in a large cave. This little bird was quite tame, and allowed me to catch him, when I instantly gave him his liberty. On the east side of the great terminal crater is a small conical funnel of scorie, the only vent hole of that substance I saw in the crater.

This mountain apdears to bd differently formed from Mauna Kea. It seems to be an endless number of layers of lava from different overflowings of its terminal crater. In the deep caves at Kapapala, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, the different strata are well defined, and may be traced with accuracy, varying in thickness with the intensity of the action, and the discharge which has taken place. Between many of the strata are strata of earth containing vegetable substances, some two feet to two feet seven inches thick, which bespeak a long state of repose, between the activity of the crater. It ought to be noticed that the thicker strata are generally lowest, the thinner toward the surface. In some places twenty-seven layers are counted, horizontal, preserving the declination of the mountain. In the caves at my camp, 40 to 70 feet deep, thin layers of earth are seen between the successive strata of lava, but none is found nearer the surface than 13 layers. No trace of animal, shell, or fish, can be seen in any of the craters or caves, either on this mountain or on Mauna Kea.

At 4 P. M. I returned to the centre of the dome, where the three men left, were huddled together to keep themselves warm. After collecting a few specimens of lava, no time was lost to leave this dreary and terrific scene.

The descent was more fatiguing, dangerous and laborious, than the ascent, and required great caution to escape unhurt; and the men benumbed with the cold, could not walk fast. Night came in so fast on me, that though the twilight there was of considerable duration, I was obliged to lay by at 10 minutes past six, in a small cave. Though sheltered from the N. W. breeze, which set in stronger as the sun sunk on the horizon, the thermometer fell to 19°, and being yet far above the line of vegetation, no fire could be had, and having no clothing, but what I traveled in during the day, and that soaked with perspiration, the cold to the senses was most intense. I remained here till 26 minutes past ten, when the welcome moon appeared over the volcano. Never can I forget the singular face she presented. The darkened limb was uppermost, and as I was waiting with watchful anxiety her rising on the horizon, I discovered a narrow silvery belt, four or five degrees high, merge from the pale fiery cloud of the volcano. I conceived this to be a portion of the light from the fire, but a few moments shewed me a beautiful moon, shining with splendour in a cloudless sky, which illuminated my rugged path; her pale face actually threw a glow of warmth throu.h my whole frame, and I thankfully and joyfully rose to scramble over my rugged path during the solitude of night, in preference to awaiting the approach of day, in this uncomfortable place of rest."

Smuggler's Boats.

From Downing's "Fanqui in China."

A large mandarin-boat was seen one afternoon passing down the river beyond the first bar, and then entering at taking up its station in one of the numerous little inlets which abound in that neighbourhood. In a few minutes it was perfectly at rest; the yellow sails were taken in and furled, and all that was then to be seen of it over the paddy, were the slender sticks with little balls on the tops, and which were hardly to be distinguished from the tall reeds which were growing at the edge of the water.

It had scarcely taken up its position, before the faint creaking sound of an approaching smuggler was to be heard in the distance. By the time it approached the open entrance of the little inlet, the mandarins were ready to receive it, and issued forth just at the moment it was passing. The centipede must at that moment have had the other firmly hooked on to it, if the spare hands on board of it had not used the long bamboos, and by their means prevented the two boats coming in contact. These long spears were pushed out at their full length, and then applied to the bows of the other vessel, while, at the same time, all the other men worked with desperation at the oars; so that in a few minutes, notwithstanding the most violent exertions of the mandarins' party, the smugglers kept clear, and were soon a boat's length ahead of their enemies.

Then the chase began. The screams and yells of the smugglers were mixed with the rickety sound of their vessel, and the orders and cries of the mandarins behind them. Every now and then the long ornamented gun was turned upon its swivel, and the loud report reverberated across the country as it was discharged against the chace, but with little effect: the shot was generally seen dancing along the water wide of the mark, resembling the stone thrown by the boy, in making what he calls 'ducks and drakes."

Although the most violent efforts were made by the other party, it was soon evident that the smuggler was walking away from his pursuer. The brown machine with its hundred feet was seen ahead, while the gaudy boat with its white oars, followed, fulminating forth its ineffective missiles, by which it was enveloped at each discharge in a cloud of blue-gray, curling smoke.

After leading the way through many intricate channels, and dodging in and out to cut off a corner, the smuggler appeared as if she would very soon be out of all danger of being taken; when, suddenly, another mandarin boat was seen issuing from a little creek right ahead, and thus completely cutting off all hopes of getting away without a scuffle. The stream was at this place so narrow that it was impossible to pass by the one ahead without coming into contact, while the one behind, now coming up very fast, prevented them making an honourable retreat. It is thus sometimes in the streets of London, when a thief is congratulating himself upon leaving far behind the hue and cry of his pursuers, upon suddenly turning a corner, he runs into the arms of a policeman.

Thus complety blockaded, the smugglers determined to stand at bay, and make a vigorous resistance. All the oars were thrown aside, but placed ready for instant use, and every man seized a bamboo-pike and awaited the attack, with great determination. They then resembled a nest of demons, chattering and yelling out their notes of defiance. As the mandarins cautiously approached, the white oars were laid back, the spears were taken up, and the savage features on the shields were displayed in the faces of the resisting vagabonds. In a short time, the poor devoted boat had its two enemies on its quarters and the whole multitude were engaged in a desperate struggle.

It appeared to be the object of the madarins to board, and thus fight hand to hand, while the object which the others wished to attain was to keep their enemies' boats off with their spears, until they could have a fair opportunity to get another run for their lives. The different manner of engaging by each party was very apparent during this conflict, and showed the decision and vigour which fighting in a good cause will give to the weakest combatant, while the arm of the strongest man is paralized, and its power withheld by the still, small voice of conscience. The mandarins rushed to the attack without hesitation, and laid about them in right good earnest with their swords and pikes, frequently cutting and wounding in a dreadful manner; but the poor smugglers appeared to act merely on the defensive, and, although slight wounds were occasionally inflicted with their spears, yet it was evident that the great aim was to keep the mandarin-boats at a distance.

A principal reason, no doubt, for this line of conduct was the knowledge of the state of the law with regard to them. If, as I heard, they are taken alive in the act of smuggling, they are sent to work in the mines during the remainder of the r live, but if the death of a single mandarin takes place during the struggle, their lives are all forfeited.

The unequal contest lasted for a longer time than might be imagined, but it was soon evident in whose favour it would terminate. The gaudy vessels were soon alongside, and the gay caps of the mandarins were seen intermixed with the bald heads of the illicit traders. The struggle was then soon over. Many of the defeated jumped overboard, and as they struggled in the waters to gain the shore, formed excellent marks for the spears and javelins of the conquerors. The great mast of them, however, were seized before they could try this doubtful chance of escape. The long pigtail served instead of the cool collar of our part of the world, and when twisted two or three times round the hand, formed a handle with which the owner could be moved at pleasure.

The men were thrown down at the bottom of the boat and three securely lashed and fastened. In a short time, the din and hubbub of so many voices were over, and the mandarin boats were seen leading away in triumph their silent and crestfallen captives.

The new Quicksilver Steam-Ship.

LIVERPOOL, April 24 The splendid new steamer (Columbus.) destined shortly to cross the Atlantic, which has created so much interest from the novel construction of the machinery, made after Mr Howard's invention for the rapid vaporisation of water on iron plates over heated quicksilver, this afternoon took a trial trip down the Mersey, and round the light ship, with a highly respectable party of gentlemen on board. She excited curiosity on the river from the novelty of her appearance and the beauty of her model. In her construction she has more of the appearance of an elegant made brig. She has two chimnies, both very low, and from the peculiar coal, the anthracite, consumed by her, no smoke is emitted By the politeness of Captain Daniel Green, her commander, and Mr. Howard, the inventor of her machinery, we have been furnished with the following particulars:—The Columbus is 330 tons builder's measurement, being 21½ feet beam, and 145 feet keel, with 13½ feet depth of hold. She has 110 horse power, two 55 feet engines, the cylinder being 40½ inches diameter, and 3½ foot stroke, and wheel 17½ feet diameter. Her speed through the water is 10 statute miles per hour: the immersed section at her present load is 150 square feet. She has now on board 20 days' fuel, besides 30 tons of iron ballast. The novelty of the engines (Mr. Howard's patent) consists in a new method of producing the steam and of condensing it, the latter part of the invention being applicable to the ordinary boilers. In a boiler the heat from the fuel is passed over very extensive surfaces, in contact with which is a large body of water, the temperature of which is always such as is due to the density or pressure of the steam, and consequently, the evaporation is limited by such circumstances. In the invention, the steam is formed by bringing a small quality of water, previously made boiling hot, in contact with a comparatively small surface, heated to red maintained at the temperature of most rapid vaporisation, viz. about 400 degrees, to effect which a quantity of mercury or amalgam lies between iron plates, the one near the fire being a plain surface of only three quarters of a foot per horse power, and the other, or vaporising surface, being about four times as much. The steam never obtains a density or pressure due to the temperature, but is itself heated to about 400 degrees, and worked in about 10 pounds to the inch, and sent off from the cylinder at half the stroke. The fuel made use of is coke or stone-coal, or other fuel giving a strong local heat and little flame. That employed to-day was Kilkenny coal. The consumption of fuel is three tons per day of twenty-four hours, and the fire grates have a total bar surface of only 22 feet, the air being supplied by a small blowing-machine, under easy regulation.

Sunday Times.

Port Essington.

Macao, 4th September, 1838.

Sir,—The inclosed is the copy of a despatch I have this day had the honor to receive from Rear Admiral Sir Frederick Maitland, which I beg leave to communicate to you for the information of the Commercial Community at Canton.

I have &c.
CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

To
The President of the Chamber of Commere.

"Wellesley" in Toong-Koo-Bay
3rd September 1838.

SIR,—I have received a despatch from Sir J. Gordon Bremer, Captain of Her Majesty's Ship "Alligator," dated the 31st May last, from the Cape of Good Hope, informing me that he was so far on his voyage to New South Wales, to establish a Post on the Northern Coast of Australia, for the purpose of giving protection to British Commerce, carried on, through Torres Strait with China and India, and with the Islands of the Indian Archipelago, and of affording an Asylum for those who may be shipwrecked on the Coast.

In a private communication he further informs me, that the Bughis Traders come to Port Essington (which is situate on the Cobourg peninsula in North Australia, in about Latitude 11° 10 South, and Longitude 132° 10 East) in great numbers, for the purpose of taking and curing the Trepang or Beche de Mer, which they carry to Macassar, and thence to the China Market, and that there is no doubt that these people, their numbers being great would take a large portion of British or Indian Cloth, Hardware and other manufactured goods from us, for which they now depend wholly on the Dutch, who charge them enormously; but he is of opinion that the great mart will eventually be the islands in the neighbourhood.

Sir Gordon expected to reach Adelaide, in South Australia, by the 5th July last, and Sydney by the 25th, and after making the necessary arrangements with the Governor of N. S. Wales, would proceed to form the Settlement.

The officer in charge of this expedition having requested me to publish some kind of notice of the undertaking, addressed to the public in India, as it may possibly induce some one to venture on sending a vessel down to the new settlement (which I understand is intended to be Port Essington) with cottons &c., and thus commence a communication.

I have been induced to acquaint you therewith, that you may bring it to the notice of the commercial gentlemen carrying on business at Canton, in such manner as you may deem most proper.
I have &c.

(Signed) FRED. L. MAITLAND.
Rear Admiral and Commander in Chief.

DISTURBANCE AT WHAMPOA. A serious disturbance has taken place at Whampoa during the week, attended with loss of life. The particulars, as far as we have been able to learn them, are the following. On the night of Sunday last, some Mandarines, on information given them of Opium being concealed in some of the houses in Whampoa, went with a guard to attack them and to confiscate the Opium. They had taken about 20 chests, when the alarm was given by the owners that they were attacked by robbers, when all the neighbourhood rose in arms upon the mandarines, rescued the greatest part of the Opium, severely wounded one mandarin in the head, another in the arm, and killed three soldiers and a mandarin's servant. The defeat of the party was of course immediately communicated to the authorities at Canton, and on the following day about 900 soldiers appeared before Whampoa, to reduce it to obedience, but these did not enter the town on the promise of the elders of the village to produce the ringleaders of the riot. The military accordingly remained in boats before the village, while most of those who had shared in the night's disorders escaped. Notwithstanding this, the municipality of the place has apprehended and delivered over to the Canton authorities about 40 prisoners, who, poor fellows, will probably be hardly dealt with, some, it is feared, will be executed, and others sent to Ele, while they possibly are by no means those most guilty. As is the case in most towns and villages, the population of Whampoa is divided into families or tribes. Of these there are three, the Sing-roo, of about 300, the Sing-leang of between 2 and 3 0, and the Sing-foong of about 1600 families. The two former tribes chiefly gain their livelyhood as shopkeepers or mechanics, the latter is mostly employed in the shipping, and the smuggling of Opium, and they alone have been implicated in this disturbance They being the most numerous, it has probably not been difficult to arrest men of their tribe or name, and they must suffer the punishment due to the crimes of their cousins.

The inhabitants of Whampoa have on several occasions opposed the government officers sword in hand, and they are reputed as a disorderly, lawless set, and now, since the Opium smuggling trade is carried on again at Whampoa, they, employed in that illicit occupation, are, of course, more than ever inclined to oppose the regular authorities. We understand that since this disturbance took place, there has been no intercourse between the land and the shipping, and it is probable this occurrence will for a time at least, put an entire stop to the smuggling of Opium there It is impossible to say what motives the mandarins may have at the present time to act with such great severity against the Opium trade as to have stopped all deliveries almost, not in Whampoa only, but also at Hong-Kong, and even on the East-coast we hear deliveries are but with difficulty effected. Whether it be true, as suspected, that some of the principal Government-officers are speculators in the drug, and that by these means they attempt to depress prices, or that they honestly act upon orders from their Government to suppress the trade, it is difficult to determine. These attempts, however, prove to us with what ease the Government, when they are in earnest, can stop the smuggling, but we doubt very much their willingness to do so permanently, indeed we have generally seen that, after a temporary stoppage like the present, mandarins having squeezed more favorable terms for themselves than before, the trade is resumed with increased briskness. That it was in contemplation to do something against the trade at Whampoa before we heard of the occurrences at Whampoa I would appear from the following placard which was stuck on the back door of one of the principal foreign hongs a day or two previous. We give a literal copy of this elegant production, which is at sametime a good illustration of the Chinese-English as spoken in Canton.

"Sir Sum Man he name A-ming and A-fi call "mandarin kich * your Penis † Boats now i come "tall ‡ all Gintle man not sent so much opin § "come up sir you like sent up two vick after that "madrin go home no fear."

We have, in another column, made an extract from the 2d number of the Hawaiian Spectator, a quarterly publication, conducted by an association of Gentlemen, and published at Honolulu, Oahu, Sandwich Islands. Our subscription volume of the first number of this publication has not yet reached us, but we have now one kindly lent to us, before us. Mr. S. W. Williams, agent for the distribution of the Spectator here, informs us that only a few Copies of the 1st and 2d numbers have yet been received, owing to which many of the subscribers have not been supplied, but that they will receive them by the next arrival from the Sandwich Islands, by which a new supply is expected. It is not a little satisfactory to see such vigourous efforts made in a part of the world hitherto deemed by most to be inhabited chiefly by mere savages, to diffuse the light of civilization. It is now about two years since a weekly paper appeared regularly at Oahu, and from the beginning of this year the Spectator, of which the first number is dated January, is issued. The style in which these volumes are got up, as to type and paper, is equal to that of some of the best periodicals in Europe and America, and as to matter much has already appeared in them which was altogether new to most readers, and from Polynesia, of which the Sandwich Islands form in some respect the centre, being as yet so little known, we may expect that much new and curious intelligence of these so long neglected regions will be rendered attainable through means of the Hawaiian Spectator. We shall from-time to time transfer to our columns a good deal of the interesting matter it contains.

We have given an extract from Mr. Downing's new book "The Fanqui in China," as a favorable specimen of it's style The narrative is pleasing and lively, and amusement may be derived from its pages, though we do not recommend to trust too implicitly in the information the writer pretends to give, much of which is erroneous, and evinces the haste with which the book has been compiled We have as yet seen the first volume only of the three, and shall, on a future day, devote more space to a critique on the "Fanqui."

CHINESE FESTIVITIES. A great part of the population of Canton was afoot a few days ago, to view a procession held in honor of a local deity(the tutelary god of several streets the inhabitants of which defrayed the expense,) the like of which, we are assured by natives, has not been seen for the last twelve years, and consequently had drawn together an immense concourse of people, not only of the inhabitants of Canton but of it's environs also. Most of the shops in the streets through which the procession passed were barricaded, so as to prevent the multitude pressing into them, and, inside, platforms were erected from which the female part of their respective families enjoyed the spectacle, in all the pride of ornament and red and white paint, which latter, but for their lively eyes gives the Chinese women the appearance of wearing masks. The procession itself was to the European spectator certainly an interesting and novel sight. It was formed by about 4000 people, mostly inhabitants of the streets placed under the protection of the honored deity, who were either sumptuously arrayed in silk and gold, and riding on richly caparisoned steeds, or they carried on beautifully adorned tables objects of curiosity for the populace to gaze at. Many of these were, certainly, remarkably beautiful, and as the Chinese inform us, of great value, being mostly made of jasper and other costly and precious stones. The beauty and splendour of the miniature temples and dwelling houses, flowerboats etc. was very great, and well worth admiration, as were also the banners and richly embroidered umbrellas of state. Curious asticles of European workmenship, such as clocks with ingenious mechanical contrivances etc., were also peraded. At intervals troops of children walked dressed as mandarins some, and others as warriors, others, again, in costly robes, were mounted on horses, and they seemed to go through the ceremony highly pleased to be made objects of wonder. Two little fellows not more tan 6 years old, on horseback, and dressed as savage warriors, naked, from the waist upwards, and adorned with golden and silver bracelets, looked particularly well. Many females also bore partin the procession, who, richly dressed, as amazones with bow and arows, etc., and attitudinizing, were carried standing, two and two, on litters borne on men's shoulders. A singular ornament worn by almost all these females were silvernails to imitate those on the fingers of great length at their fingers-ends. The procession lasted the whole day, and such was it's length that it did not pass any given spot in less than two hours. It's splendour has even engaged the cüriosity of the Viceroy, at whose request it passed by his palace to enable him and his family to see it.

The fine Siamese ship the Conqueror, belonging to the King of Siam, has been wrecked on the west of Hainam, and totally lost, though the crew, consisting of 82 individuals, chiefly Siamese, has been saved. The ship was on a voyage from Bancock to China. The crew after crossing the narrow channel between Hainam and the continent, were sent on to Canton, which they reached after a journey of about 36 days, the greatest part of which they performed on foot, marching during 23 days, and have arrived here in very good health without the loss of a man. To judge of the appearance of some of the men, Malays, of whom there were five among them, the treatment they received from the Chinese must have been very good, and they seemed well satisfied with their lot. These Malays, chiefly natives of Soerabaya, have, by the government, been sent to Macao, there to be embarked for Singapore, whilst the Siamese are awaiting an opportunity here to return to their country. The humane conduct of the Chinese authorities on this occasion deserves much praise.

We have seen the first number of the Boletim Official do Governo de Macao, a new paper which, as we mentioned a few weeks since, appears now in Macao under the patronage of it's Portuguese local authorities. This paper appears once a week, price of subscription 10 $ per annum, 6 $ for 6, and 4 $ for three months, paid in advance. It is well got up as far as it's typical arrangement is concerned, and the list of subscribers we saw promises a moderate support from the public.

By the Sir Ed. Ryan we have received the Sun, Free Press of the 30th ulto., and the Penang Gazette of the 13th, neither of which papers contain news that have not been anticipated by previous arrivals here.

KIN-QUA'S AFFAIRS. In our last week's paper we gave the Vice-roy's answer to the petition of the Parsee merchants, regarding Kin qua's debts, in which he intimated that Kin-qua would be imprisoned unless some arrangement was made by him with his creditors, and the Nam-hoy did, in consequence, take charge of him on Saturday last.—This was never intended by the Parsees, and as they found that a perseverance in the measures they were pursuing would only distress the hong without benefitting themselves, they proposed assenting to the same terms as the other creditors, but with the view of making the hong more secure and efficient, insisted that the Co-hong should make an annual payment of $ 125,000,—instead of 100,000, and that the interest should be 6 per Cent instead of 5, and we believe the Hong-merchants have agreed to these terms, so that the general creditors will be all benefited by this arrangement, and Kin-qua's hong become more safe.

On Judging Justly.—A perfectly just and sound mind is a rare and invaluable gift. But it is still much more unusual to see such a mind unbiassed in all its actings. God has given this soundness of mind but to few; and a very small number of those few escape the bias of some predilection, perhaps habitually operating; and none are at all times, and perfectly, free. I once saw this subject forcibly illustrated. A watchmaker told me that a gentleman had put an exquisite watch into his hand's that went irregularly. It was as perfect a piece of work as was ever made. He took it to pieces and put it together again twenty times. No manner of defect was to be discovered, and yet the watch went intolerably At last it struck him that possibly the balance wheel might have been near a magnet. On applying a needle to it, he found his suspicions true. Here was all the mischief. The steel-work in the other parts of the watch had a perpetual influence on its motions; and the watch went as well as possible with a new wheel. If the soundest mind be magnetised by any predilection, it must act irregularly.—Cecil.

BEETHOVEN was eternally quarrelling with his domestics, whom he would swear at constantly, nay sometimes drive them in a body from his house. In dress and appearance he looked like a beggar—in manner sulky, or spiteful, as it suited his humour; he would call people names as they passed him in the street, and tell them of their faults in public assemblies; being deaf, he was regardless of their expostulations, or censures. His laugh was more like a scream, and he gave utterance to it, in defiance of place or circumstance—yet he was much to be pitied. His manner towards his servants made them dislike him, and in revenge they thwarted and cheated him. He was mistrustful of every one; consequently had no friend to watch over his comforts, and cheer his solitary state. He would frequently walk out alone in the fields, and several times, sitting down to compose and write, has fallen asleep and remained there through frightful storms, which drenched him to the skin, and confined him to the house for days afterwards, with severe colds and fevers —Musical World.

ECCE SIGNA!—Signboard fame is of all kinds of popularity the most fleeting. It is not long since every second shop for the sale of haberdashery was a "Waterboo House." Then succeeded "Navarino House," and these in their turn made room for "Reform Establishments," with variations of "Grey," "Russell," and "Brougham." These, too, have had their day, and now "Victoria" is the popular nomenclature, there being no fewer than four Victoria Houses" in two of the leading metropolitan thoroughfares. In fact her Majesty's name bids fair to drive "Halls of Commerce," "Equity Houses," and "Economical Establishments," wholly out of the field.

TURKISH SUPERSTITIONS.—Another singular custom is that of pouring water where any one has fallen, to prevent a recurrence of the accident on the same spot, which is religiously observed by the lower orders; as well as flinging stones at the body of a decapitated criminal, in order to secure the dreams of the spectator from an intrusion of the ghastly object. No Turk of the lower ranks of society ever passes a shred of paper which may chance to lie upon his path; he always gathers it up with the greatest care; as the popular belief leads him to place implicit faith in an ancient superstition that all paper thus obtained will be collected after death, and scattered over the burning soil through which he is to pass to paradise; and that consequently the more he is enabled to secure, the less suffering he will have to endure hereafter.—Cilg of the Sultan.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—Both Grey and White Longcloths are rather lower, so many being thrown upon the market and several small sales have been made during the week of the former at 3.75 and of the latter at 4¼. Cotton Yarn of common quality continues almost unsaleable. A considerable sale of good was reported to us yesterday, but we could not obtain the exact terms. The quantity was about 1000 Piculs No. 16 @ 30—the price not under $ 24.

Woollens.—Spanish Stripes continue at the same quotations but without active demand. Longells, are rather lower both for scarlets and assorted colors. Camlets without much enquiry, and no sales are reported of either Dutch or English, holders looking for an advance.

Metals. Lead and Iron are both rather down—several parcels offering.

Straits Produce.—Pepper is not in so brisk demand, but it would fetch still 7½, the supply being very short. There has been no further sale of Betelnut, the price of which will greatly depend on the supply, which at present would appear likely to be rather short. Tin and Rattans without alteration.

Rice,—is stationary at our low quotations, but as rain is required it may advance a little from the want of it.

Cotton.—There is no alteration in either price or demand, and no sale of any sort have been effected. The Bombay is taken off in small lots, the good quality at from 8. 7 @ 9. 3, and very little of the fine is now here. The lower descriptions sell from 7 @ 8. 3, Madras and Bengal nothing has been done during the week. The clearances in the last 4 weeks are reported at

Bombay	Bengal	Madras	Total
20,500	2500	680	23,680 Bales.

Nothing is yet known of the Nankin crop, but accounts may now be shortly expected.

Opium.—In addition to the seizure of the small dealers and smokers in Canton, some dirturbance took place in the early part of the week between the Mandarins and villagers on shore at Whampoa, which at first was expected would seriously interfere with the Opium trade, but it has been arranged. The brokers however are still alarmed and have, we believe, got rid of all their purchases, that, when the market again opens, a good demand may be expected. Malwa has been sold as low as 560; it is now held little higher. Patna has been firmer @ 570 @ 580. being in few hands. The deliveries to the 15th were, Patna old 27; new 226 Benares, old—; new, 4; Malwa, 71; Total 32 8 chests.

EXPORTS.

Nankin Silk.—The Chinese still maintain that the supply will fall short of last year, and are still demanding upwards of $ 600 for their new silk, but there are no purchasers.

Tea.—We hear of no transaction, and our quotations are altogether nominal.

N. B. The Chinese government being ignorant of or not recognising the bonding system, imported goods are subject to an export duty when exported which duty is extremely heavy on most articles and generally greatly exceeds the import duty

Note.—It will not be amiss to remark, that these Nominal duties being almost always a matter of specific bargain with the hong merchants, either on the part of the foreigners or of the outside native merchants, the only use of the above list is as a guide, from which to learn the general average of charges which are classed under the same of duties. The charges of outside merchants are necessarily greater than those of hong merchants; especially on staple articles. [Morrison's Chinese Commercial Guide.

WHAMPOA PORT CHARGES.

Pilotage inward and outward	$120
(Linguist's and comprador's fees vary on ships of different nations.)
English country ships pay for Comprador	50
for Linguists' fees	173
Cumshu, on French vessels 1,680 Taels.
On other vessels 1,600 Taels, or	2233
Charged alike on all vessels large or small	$2566

Measurement is charged at three different rates, according to the product arising from multiplying the length between the mizen and foremasts by the breadth at the gangway, and dividing the product by 10.

The First class, of which the product so arising is not less than 160 covids or 1950 feet, pays 0.7874755 taels per covid, or about $0.8074 per foot.

Second class, above 1200 covids, or 14621 feet, pays 0.7221091 taels per covid, or about $0.8229 per foot.

Third class, 1200 covids and under, pays 0.5062341 taels per covid, or about, $0.5769 per foot.

By a conclusion of the Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce, the sum paid to the Hoppo on Rice laden ships, should be considered a charge on the vessel not on the rice . . . . . $ 9 39.50

And that the sum paid to the Linguist, should also be charged to the ship . . . 2 50

Total Charges on ship 11 89.50

And that all other charges should fall on the Rice.

When the Consignee of a ship has no share of her import or export cargo under his management, the hong merchants usually demand $ 600 or $ 700 to defray the charges on securing her

CANTON CURRENCY.

The circulating medium at Canton is broken Spanish dollars by weight the proportion of which to a tael varies in different transactions; being in calculations of prices, or accounts between foreigners and native merchants, at the rate of 720 Taels per 1000 Drs. But in the weighing of money for payment . . . . . 717 " 1000

Excepting to the Company's treasury, or for Bengal opium, when it is weighed . . . . . 718 " 1000

Or to native merchants not of the co-hong, who receive, unless otherwise agreed . . . . . 715 " 1000

As do also ship and house compradors.

COMMERCIAL WEIGHTS.

Pecul.	Catties.	Taels.	Lbs. av.	Cwt.	Kilogrammes.
1	100	1600	133⅓	1,0,2⅓ or 1.19047
	1	16	1⅓		0.604,725

One Ton = 16 peculs, 80 catties. One cwt. = 84 catties. One Pound avoirdupois = ⅓ of a catty. Four Ounces avoirdupois = 3 taels.

MONEY WEIGHTS.

Tael.	Mace.	Cand.	Cash.	Ounce troy.	Grains troy.	Ind. Tolahs.
1	10	100	1000	1.208	579.84	3.2213
	1	10	100		57.984

500 Taels = 604 ounces troy. 3000 do. = 302 pounds troy.

Usage has established a difference between the tael of commercial weights which, at the rate of 33⅓ pounds to the pecul, weighs 583⅓ troy grains, and he tael of money weights, of which the old standard is 579.84 troy grains.

* Not more than 100 peculs of raw, and 80 peculs of wrought, silk may be exported in one vessel. When this law is contravened, a fee of $ 10 a 15 per pecul, besides the duty, is paid for connivance. This is sometimes called 'double duty' on silk. The amounts here given as duties on silks can be but little depended on, particularly the charges per piece.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

CAMLETS.—Very dull.

COCHINEAL.—No demand.

COTTON.—About 2000 Bales of middling qualities Bombay have been sold at Taels 8.3 mace a 9.1 per pecul, and several parcels of inferior from Ts. 7.8 a 7.6 and Ts. 8. per pecul; but the market is without animation, though the dealers have only moderate stocks on hand.—In the Bengal and Madras staples nothing doing.

COTTON YARN.—A sale of 200 a 300 Bales is reported, at about $33 for Nos. 20 a 40's; inferior qualities are dull and difficult of sale.

IRON and LEAD } Little business doing in either of these metals at present.

LONG CLOTHS.—Keep going down, and though some parties have realized at present rates, others prefer holding in hopes of a slight improvement. We have not heard of much business having been done. Grey goods are dull.

LONG ELLS.—There has not been much done lately.

OPIUM.—Most of the Brokers are still absent, and no transactions in the regular trade have taken place during the week. Sales from Chinese to Foreigners have been made of Malwa at 8555 and Patna at 560 and Benares at 8520, but our present quotations are the nominal rates of the day; which denote a slight recovery from the late depressed rates.—Deliveries of Opium 1st to 8th September, Patna old 7, new 179; Benares, new 4; Malwa 13; Total 203.

STRAIT'S PRODUCE.—Nothing has occurred in these articles lately to cause any particular observation.

WOOLLENS.—We have heard of some sales of very good Stripes at $1.40 a $1.45 per yard, and the article is represented as steady.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK NANKIN.—Foreigners forbear treating with the dealers, whilst they persevere in their exorbitant demands of more than $600 per pecul.

SYCEE SILVER.—Still continues scarce outside.

TEA.—The musters of the New Comers are daily arriving; parties are employed in their examination, but no prices are yet spoken of. The market therefore is perfectly quiet, and very few full chops have reached Canton.

EXCHANGE on LONDON.—Little doing, and we have no alteration to notice.

FREIGHT.—About 300 Tons to London have lately been engaged at £4.10 per Ton.

General Chamber of Commerce.

Canton, 25th September, 1838.

By order of the Committee

WILLIAM SCOTT, Secretary.

PAPERS RELATIVE TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A COURT OF JUDICATURE IN CHINA.

Presented to the House of Commons by Her Majesty.

No. 7.

Captain Elliot to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 22, 1837.)

(Extract.) Macao January 22 1837.

HIS Excellency the Governor [in a memorial to the Emperor on the subject of Captain Elliot's being permitted to reside at Canton] plainly signifies that he is sensible the formal admission of an officer is a novel principle; but he nevertheless urges its adoption upon the ground that it is needful to wave something in point of form and ancient custom, for the sake of preserving a state of peaceful order at Canton.

No. 8.

Captain Elliot to Viscount Palmerston.—Received December 4. 1837.)

Canton, June 2, 1837.

(Extract.)

IN concluding this despatch. I venture to offer my humble opinion (strengthening by every day's experience in the country) that there is an increasing disposition upon the part of the Chinese Government, to conciliate that of His Majesty.

No. 9.

Captain Elliot to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received December 4, 1837.)

Canton, June 2. 1837.)

My Lord,

This may be a convenient occasion respectfully to press the necessity for the early establishment of some formal and efficacious means of maintaining a state of good order amongst His Majesty's subjects in this country, and for the adjustment of disputes involving claims of money which may arise upon the) spot.

On the very day on which this despatch is dated, a British subject has succeeded in making his escape from this country after having defrauded two industrious Englishmen, keeping a store in Canton, to a considerable extent; and I am sorry to add, leaving unpaid accounts to Chinese shopkeepers, amounting, as it already appears, to more than 1000 dollars.

I sincerely hope that examples of this kind may be of rare occurrence, but it must be admitted that there is no country in which fraud of this kind is easier of successful accomplishment than China, or in which its utmost practicable prevention is of greater public moment: and let me add, no country where the Government will be found more ready to leave to Foreign Powers unobstructed facilities for the upholding of a more equitable condition of circumstances amongst all those over whom they have a natural right to interpose such authority.

I presume to trouble your Lordship with the accompanying short memorandum of suggestions upon this subject: and I have the honor to remain, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT,
Chief Superintendent.

ENCLOSURE IN No. 9

Memorandum of Suggestions concerning the establishment of fit Regulations for the Government of His Majesty's Subjects in China.

(Extract.)

THE necessity for the existence of some efficacious means of maintaining a state of good order amongst His Majesty's subjects resorting to China, by regulations lawfully sanctioned in England arises from the extreme inconvenience and hazard of leaving that object to be secured by the operation of the native laws. Partly from motives of a just and rational nature, but principally perhaps from a desire to avoid serious disputes with Great Britain, it may be depended upon that the Chinese Government is willing and anxious to devolve upon that of His Majesty the task of ordering these things according to its own pleasure: indeed I have already ascertained that there would be no difficulty in securing from the Provincial Government, an Edict declaratory of its consent to the establishment of police and judicial institutions.

A homicide is the only conceivable case in which the Chinese authorities would attempt to interfere; and I feel assured it would be easy to draw the disposal even of that charge within the competency of our own tribunal

I will only further preface these suggestions with the remark, that no circumstance seems to be better calculated to relax the anti-social jealousy and alarm of the Chinese than the existence of adequate regulations for the repression of disorder.

No.

Captain Elliot to Viscount Palmerston,—(Received March 12, 1838.)

Canton, September 1837.

My Lord,

AN accident of a serious nature has just occured at this place, and being apprehensive that unfounded and disquieting reports may reach England upon the subject, I forward this despatch by a ship bound to Bombay, in the hope of saving the December overland mail.

Two Lascars belonging to an English passage boat landed on the evening of the 20th instant, on the north shore of the river, about two miles below the factories; and a fray took place, in which a Chinese was declared to have received several severe stabs with a knife.

There were two other Lascars on shore at the same place, and although it does not seem that they were engaged in the affair, they with the two principals fell into the hands of the Chinese Police: and the whole four were brought up to this place, and confined in the Consoo-house.

On the morning of the next day, (the 21st) the magistrate in whose district the disturbance ocurred, sent them to me for examination, but declined to leave them in my hands.

I had no strong objection they should remain in the custody of the Mandarins at the Consoo house during the daytime, because I could always know whether they were removed within the walls of the city, and then transmit the most urgent appeals for their immediate delivery to my care: but as night approached, and it would be difficult to watch proceedings, other steps became necessary.

At 8 o'clock, therefore, I sent for the three official merchants to the hall, and demanded that the men should be given up before 10 o'clock that night, upon my pledge that they should be fairly tried according to the laws of my country, and in the presence of Mandarins, for any crime alleged against them.

Howqua replied with composure, that these persons were in the custody of the Mandarins, charged with a violation of the laws of the Empire, and pending the determination of the safety of a Chinese who had been severely stabbed by one amongst them. If Englishmen went to France, he argued, they were amenable to the justice of that country; and then taking this rather displeasing occasion to compliment me upon a presumed reasonableness of disposition, and love of justice, which he said had secured for me the respect of the Governor, he required me to show why the case should be different when Englishmen came to China.

I answered, that I would venture to say my Government would admit all the force of this reasoning, as soon as it could be made at all applicable by the Emperor's gracious will to place my countrymen on the like footing in China, with respect to freedom of intercouse, and the equal administration of the laws, with that on which they stood in France, considered with relation to those points.

There was no pretension in England, he might assure himself, to dictate any change of policy to the Chinese; that was a high matter which depended upon the Imperial wisdom and pleasure: but it was not to be denied that the present state of things was attended with great inconveniences, and one amongst them was the utter impossibility to concede their right to try British subjects for a breach of Chinese laws, by Chinese Officers, whilst those laws were only partially administered towards them; and whist appeal to the higher Chinese tribunals is entirely shut out from them.

All that could be justly expected from my Government under such circumstances was, to provide means for the fair trial of British offenders against Chinese life or property, by British laws and British officers.

With respect to the merits of this particular case, I urged, that no European had seen the body of the man said to be stabbed; that the Lascar denied the whole allegation; and that it was certain no knife had been found upon him.

I concluded, by insisting that the men must be delivered to me by 10 o'clock, or that I must quit Canton, leaving, upon his Excellency and themselves, in the form of a protest, all the grave responsibility of any evil consequences which might ensue from their further detention.

I suggested at the same time, that as soon as it were known I had left the factories, it was too probable some 800 or 1,000 men might come up to Canton from Whampoa, to carry a petition to the city gates for the restoration of the people. Whilst I remained, my countrymen would be patient, feeling assured that the safety of the people was certain: it was not easy to believe they would remain so after I had left Canton.

The Lascars. it was to be observed, were a very excitable race of people; and they might urge their commanders to take some hazardous step, which no man would deplore more sincerely than myself; but it would be wholly out of my power to controul events, if they constrained me, by their unreasonable refusal of my proposal, to retire from the stage of my public duties, the very first of which was the protection of my countrymen.

Howqua was evidently greatly shaken by this tone of representation; but he still anxiously entreated me to wait till he could see the Governor in the morning. I felt, however, that this was one of those cases, in which firm countenance and rigid adherence to my original declaration was all I had to depend upon; and I closed the discussion by desiring the people to prepare my boat.

At this point Howqua gave way and the men were forthwith restored to me.

They have been in my custody ever since; and your Lordship may be assured that I will never give them up to any other form of trial than that to which I have pledged miself namely, a trial according to the forms of British law.

It is satisfactory to add that the Chinese is said to be doing well; and that the tranquil course of the trade has not yet been in errupted.

I would in this place, my Lord, express a respectful but earnest hope, that no time may be lost in the formation of adequate judicial and police institutions for the government of the King's subjects in this Empire; and I have no hesitation in assuring your Lordship that it is in my power to secure from the provincial authorities the most formal sanction to their operation.

For several months in the year, there are not less than two thousand of His Majesty's subjects at Canton, Whampoa, Macao, and the immediately adjacent anchorages; and your Lordship is aware that, except in cases of homicide, the Chinese Government do not interpose at all for the preservation of peace between them and their own people, or between His Majesty's subjects themselves.

Your Lordship will conceive the exceeding risk and unsuitableness of the absence of defined means of sufficient controul.

I have the honor to be, &c.,
(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT,
Chief Superinten ent.
Macao, October 3, 1837.

P. S.—Particular circumstances calling me to this place on the 30th ultimo, I apprised the Provincial Government that I adhered to my pledge with respect to these people, but must take them away with me to Macao. The day after my departure from Canton, accompanied by the Lascars, a chop was issued by the district magistrate, desiring that they might be finally delivered to me to be dealt with as I saw fit.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.

From the Englishman Extraordinary, London 14th June.

In the House of Commons the Waterford election committee having reported that Mr. Barrow was duly elected, the adjourned debate was resumed on Sir T. D. Acland's amendment upon the motion for going into Committee to consider Lord John Russel's Irish Tithe Resolutions—As usual on the second night of an Adjourned Debate, the House was at first but thinly attended and little interest was excited. Mr. Litton, Mr. Lascelles, Mr. Rellington, Mr. Towneley, and Mr. J. Young having spoken, Mr. Benett declared that he could not consent to rescind the appropriation resolutions of 1835, although he then voted against them, because he considered them erroneous in principle, and only brought forward for party purposes.—Lord Sandon followed, and was succeeded by Mr. H. G. Ward, Lord Teignmouth, Mr. Bellew, Mr. F. Shaw, Mr. O'Connell, and Sir R. Peel.—Mr. Spring Rice closed the debate.—The gallery was then cleared for a division, when the numbers were; for Lord John Russell's motion, 317; for Sir Thomas D. Acland's Amendment, 288; majority, 29.—The announcement of the numbers was received with triumphant cheering, which was continued for a considerable time. * * * * *

Negro apprenticeship.—Sir George Grey then, in a speech of considerable length, moved the resolutions of which notice had been given in his name, with reference to the decision of the House on Tuesday week upon the subject of negro apprenticeship. It will be remembered that the point of the Honourable Baronet's resolutions consisted in a declaration that it was not expedient to found any measure on the decision come to upon the 22d of this month.—Sir Eardly Wilmot proposed, as an amendment, that it was expedient to carry into effect the resolution moved by him on the occasion alluded to, and carried by a majority of three in a comparatively thin house. The Hon. Baronet, however, still declined to originate the measure of which he thus formally declared the expediency. After a protracted debate, there then appeared—for Sir George Grey's resolutions, 250; for Sir E. Wilmot's amendment 178; majority against giving effect to the resolution of Tuesday night last, 72.

The Bishop of London intimated that he would on an early day, call attention to the countenance given by the Indian Government to idolatrous services of the Hindoos, unless her Majesty's Ministers should then be able to state that some measures were in progress on the subject. Lord Melbourne assured the Right Rev. Prelate that the serious attention of her Majesty's Ministers was directed to the matter. * * * * *

The House then went into Committee on the Irish Municipal Corporation Bill, when Sir Robert Peel moved that the electoral qualification be a rental of £10 per annum. Lord John Russell objected to this, and proposed that the qualification be a rental of £5. Sir Robert Peel's motion was lost by a majority of 26.

The Queen, whose small and delicate feet are generally admired, appeared at the birth day drawing-room in no very small a pair of satin slippers, beautifully embroidered, that it is considered they could not possibly have been worn by any other lady present.

A rumour of the King of Hanover's journey to Berlin, being connected with the marriage of Prince George is confirmed by a letter from Hanover quoted in the Augsburg Gazette.

FATAL RIOT NEAR CVNTERBURY.

Intelligence was received in town on Thursday night, the 31st ultimo, of a most sanguinary and insane riot, which took place on the same day, in the neighbourhood of Canterbury, and which had its origin in the wild freaks of a madman, who styled himself Sir William Courtenay. Various accounts of this lamentable occurrence have reached us, of which the following seems to be the most accurate. In 1833, an eccentric individual paid a visit to Canterbury, and took up his abode for some time at the Rose Inn. Great interest was excited, and most persons were desirous of ascertaining who this eccentric character might be. At length an election for member for the city took place, on which occasion the gentleman in question offered himself as a candidate, with extraordinary success, in the name of Sir W. H. H. Courtenay. Such were his persuasive powers, that persons of all ranks felt an interest in his society; some, however, considered him insane, while others were of a contrary opinion. Eventually Sir William, through advocating the cause of a party of smugglers on the Kentish coast was indicted for perjury, and was tried at Maidstone, before Mr. Justice Park, on Thursday, the 25th of July, 1833. The sentence of the Court was imprisonment and transportation, but Sir William being proved to be insane, his sentence was commuted to confinement in the lunatic asylum at Barming-heath. After about four years' confinement, he was released, on security being given for his future good behaviour. His abode then was at the residence of Mr. Francis of Fairbrook, in the neighbourhood of Boughton, near Canterbury. Some recent misunderstanding between Sir William and Mr Francis's family occasioned him to remove to a cottage adjoining, occupied by one Wills. Subsequently he was received at a farm house, called Bossenden-farm, occupied by a person named Culver. From this hou-e appears to have commenced the horrid affair we are about to narrate—an affair from which it could not be anticipated there would result such a melancholy loss of life. We now proceed to give our readers an account of the proceedings from Monday morning, the day on which several unfortunate men went in public in company with and at the command of Sir William. On Monday they sallied forth from the village of Boughton, where they bought bread, and proceeded to Will's house, near Fairbrook. A loaf was broken asunder and placed on a pole, with a flag of white and blue, with a rampant lion. Thence they proceeded to Goodnestone, near Faversham, producing throughout the whole neighbourhood the greatest excitement, and adding to their numbers by the harangues occasionally delivered by this ill-fated madman. At this farm Courtenay stated that "he would strike the bloody blow." A match was then taken from a bean-stack, which had been introduced by one of the party. They next proceeded to a farm at Herne-hill, where Courtenay requested the inmates to feed his friends, which request was immediately complied with. Their next visit was at Dargate-common, where Sir William, taking off his shoes, said, "I now stand on my own bottom." By Sir William's request, his party went to prayers, and then proceeded to Bossenden farm, where they supped, and slept in the barn that night (Monday). At three o'clock on Tuesday morning they left, and proceeded to Sittingbourne to breakfast, where Sir William paid 25s.; they then visited Newnham, where a similar treat was given at the George. After visiting Eastling, Throwley, Seldwich, Lees and Selling, and occasionally addressing the populace, holding out to them such inducements as are usually made by persons desirous of creating a disturbance, they halted in a chalkpit to rest, and on Wednesday evening arrived at Culver's farm, called Bossenden, close to the scene of action. Mr. Carling having had some of his men enticed from their work, applied for a warrant for their apprehension. Mears, a constable, in company with his brother, proceeded to the house of Culver, when, on application being made for the men alluded to, Sir William immediately shot the young man who accompanied his brother in the execution of his duty. Such was the excitement, and the desperate menaces of Sir William and his party, that it became necessary for the magistrates to interfere to put a stop to the proceedings by the capture of the ringleader of the party, from whose advice to his followers the most serious consequences were likely to ensue. At twelve o'clock they assembled at a place called the Osier-bed, where every means were resorted to, to quell the disturbance, but without success. Sir William defied interruption to his men, and fired on the Rev. Mr. Handley, of Herne-hill, who with his brother was assisting to take him into custody. They then made their way to Bossenden-wood, where they lay in ambush, but, as no means appeared to present themselves by which the ringleader could with safety be secured, he being evidently mad, and in the possession of loaded fire-arms, threatening to shoot the first man who interfered with him, it became necessary to apply for the assistance of the 45th regiment, stationed at Canterbury barracks. On the arrival of a detachment of this regiment, they proceeded to the wood, where the party were waiting their arrival.

Sir William, on perceiving his opponents, advanced with the greatest sang-froid, and deliberately shot Lieut. Bennet, of the 45th regiment. This occasioned a return from the man covering his officer, who immediately advanced and shot Sir William, who fell, and died instantly. The excitement at that period, occasioned by each party losing their commander, caused a desperate attack, which terminated in the death of ten persons, besides the brother of the constable shot in the morning, and several others seriously wounded, of some of whom little hopes are entertained of their recovery. The weapons in the hands of the followers of Sir William were chiefly, if not altogether, heavy bludgeons. The following are the names of the killed:—Sir William Percy Honywood Courtenay, Knight of Malta, &c., supposed to be John Nicholls Tom, late of Truro, in Cornwall; Lieut. Bennet, 45th; Edward Wright, Herne-hill; F. Harvey, Herne-hill; E. Brenchett, Dunkirk; W. Burford, Boughton; W. Foster, Herne-hill; Thomas Griggs, W. Wry, Herne-hill; George Catt, constable of Faversham killed in the execution of his duty. Lieutenant Prendergast, wounded in the head. Accounts of a later date mention that two more of the rioters have died of their wounds.

Sir Jasper Nicholls is reported as likely to succeed Sir Peregrine Maitland in his command in India. Sir Lionel Smith, it is also said, will resign his governmet of Jamaica, so soon as a successor is appointed.

THE CORONATION.—It is understood that numerous entertainments will be given by the nobility and gentry after the Coronation, and it is expected that the season will be unusally gay and brilliant. We understand the Coronation procession will be of unexampled splendor, and will proceed from Buckingham Palace up Constitution-hill, through Piccadilly, St. James's streets, and Pall mall, to Westminster Abbey. There will also be a fair for two days held in Hyde Park, and fire works and other amusements will be afforded to the population of London.

"Notice is hereby given, it is the particular desire of the Queen that all Ladies attending her Majesty's Drawing Rooms should appear in dresses of British manufacture."

There is every probability of obtaining a brood from the giraffes at the Zoological Gardens in the Regent's-park, a fact very important and interesting to the naturalists.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30th.—Lord Brougham, on his recent tour at Brussels, was received with great honour and respect. After being closetted with the king, he went to the Chamber of Representatives, accompanied by Sir R. Adair, and on being recognised in the Ambassador's tribune, all the members rose simultaneously and bowed, as a compliment to a man whose great talents and mental power has rendered him celebrated over Europe.

THE GREAT WESTERN.—The Great Western sailed on the 2d instant from Bristol. She had on board sixty-five passengers, besides a general assortment of cargo; she has taken with her 41,750 sovereigns; she is in much better sailing trim than on her last starting, and the general impression is, that she will be at New York on the 16th instant.

United States.

A most awful fire broke out at Charleston, on the night of the 27th April, consuming whole streets, and occasioning a loss of property to the amount of 3,000,000 dollars. The New York Daily Express says—"Thirteen hundred buildings are destroyed, with their contents, supposed to be worth 5,000 000 dollars! The flames were visible for twenty miles. The noble hotel, called the Charleston, worth, with its furniture, 200 000 dollars, is a heap of smoking ruins. The Masonic-hall, a Methodist Episcopal, and a Methodist Protestant church, Catholic chapel and Hebrew Synagogue, are destroyed, with many of the most handsome houses in the city. Col. C. J. Stellman, Mr. F. Schnierle, Mr. Pieut, and Capt. Duff, of the ship Herald, have lost their lives. Many are dreadfully injured by the falling of ruins, and their lives despaired of. Nearly 1,500 familes are entirely without a home, and many even without shelter. The distress and suffering are inconceivable. About 2,000,000 dollars are said to be insured partly in New York."

CANTON PRESS.
Saturday, 29th Sept.

By the Sir Herbert Compton from Bombay, 20th August, the London overland mail of 16 June and Galignani's Messengers of 18th have been received. We have given from the London Englishman Extraordinary of the 13th some extracts. There are few news of political importance, in default of which the approaching pageant of the Queen's coronation was the great event of the day, and Ambassadors from almost all the European Courts were thronging to London to compliment the Queen. Commerce, on the whole, was improving, though Teas were rather lower than before. We notice the arrival in England of the following vessels from China: George IV, Ann, Rajahstan, Abere. Robinson, Isabella, Edinburgh, General Kyd, Argyle, Lady Nugent, Sophia, Morley, Lady McNaghten, Tigris, Isabel.

Per Mermaid Calcutta papers to 14th August have been received which mention the loss of the Raj Ranee on the Eastern Reef, when leaving the river bound for England, and of the Sir Herbert Taylor from Singapore with a cargo of Betelnut, on the middle Point, nearly opposite Kedgeree. Our shipping report of this day, we are sorry to say, shews a rather long list of disasters and casualties. The loss of the Claremont from Bombay, on the Ladrones, will again be heavily felt by our Insurance Offices, her cargo consisting, we hear, of 2300 bales of Cotton, and about 300 chests of Opium. There has been very bad weather in the China sea on the 24th and 25th, the gale commencing from the East, and blowing afterwards with increased violence from the South. The weather on land also was very bad, and a great many native boats on the river have been upset and many lives lost.

P. S. Sir Herbert Compton we have received a Singapore Free Press of 13th September. The Sylph from China, in 22 days, arrived in Singapore on the 14th.

Another Edict from the authorities respecting he Kinqua debts has appeared, and as far as, from a very superficial interpretation of its contents, we could gather, the arrangement alluded to in our last, as entered into by the Parsee creditors, is approved of, as to the payment in ten annual instalments of the debt, and two years more for the payment of the interest, but no mention is made of the Co-hong's liability to the payment of 8125,000 per annum, as far at least as we understood our interpreter, but we hope in our next to be able to lay a complete translation of the document before our readers.

We have, as will be seen from our extracts, devoted considerable space to Capt. Elliot's correspondence with his government, a correspondence which, by order of government, has been published and which was to have the effect, no doubt, on the M. P. s, perfectly to understand the very intricate question of relations between the English and Chinese nations. We have, from these papers, not recopied those addressed to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs by Sir G. B. Robinson, they are Nos. 1 to 6, but are extremely unimportant, and as insipid as the quarter whence they come. We begin our copies with the present Chief Superintendent's letters and much as we hoped to have seen something in them to meet our approbation, we found but assumption unsupported, and presumption strong, trusting in the absence of knowledge at home with regard to Chinese affairs.

The object for which these papers have been published is to establish a Court of Judicature, or in the words of this publication itself "For the purpose of enabling the British Superintendents of trade to exercise a control over the proceedings of British subjects with each other, and with the Chinese."

We certainly do admit that it would be desirable to have some jurisdiction here to restrain British subjects in case of any violation of the law, and we are by no means averse to the establishment of a Court of Justice. The singular supineness of the Chinese government, in the very few cases that have been brought to its notice, where foreigners were concerned, inclines us to the belief that they would have no objection whatever to leave the jurisdiction over the foreigners to their own tribunals. But we are at loss to know whence Capt. Eliot can have drawn the information he gives to his government, that "he feels no hesitation "in assuring his Lordship that it is in his power "to secure from the provincial authorities the most "formal sanction to their (judicial and police institutions) operation."

We ourselves do not doubt that, if a person, competent in the law of the realm, (let the Superintendents be ever so amiable and accomplished, it can hardly be expected that a Captain of the Royal Navy knows much about Commercial affairs) were to be sent out, his presence here might be of some use; he would be appealed to, he would be the judge in differences arising among his countrymen, and, we suppose, that Parliament might render his decrees to be respected in other courts of either British India or Great Britain. This would certainly be some advantage, though not of so much as may appear at first sight, the commercial community of Canton being composed of foreigners of a great many different nations, individuals of which would, if their cause be bad, not like to subject it to a British Court. As to the Court of criminal judicature, we do not see how that can be effective without a strong constabulary force, and how it can possibly raise that here, it will do better to consider seriously before it establishes itself. In fact we should think that from the great scarcity of crime hitherto in China among foreigners, it is of little consequence whether such a court exist at all, and we doubt still more the propriety of its being established, and its entering on its duties, as it would supply the Chinese with the pretext of considering that court answerable for whatever irregularities might have been commited by their countrymen.

However, this is different from Capt. Elliot's singular statement that it is "in his power to secure "from the provincial authorities the most formal sanction to their operation." We might quote here the Emperor's edict in favor, if so it may be called, of a Magistrate coming to Canton, when, in consequence of Capt. Elliot's application in January last year, the Viceroy reported to the Emperor, and the Emperor's answer was then received to the following effect, viz; "When he (the British Magistrate) "in future either lives at Macao or at Canton he "ought to conform to the old laws. He is not "permitted to exceed the proper time by loitering "about and thus to give gradually rise to irregularities. If the said foreigner performs his duty "improperly, acts irregularly, and combines with "traitorous natives to disobey clandestinely the "laws, he shall be driven back to his country in "order to do away with the source of evil."

This, we opine, or expressions akin to the foregoing, will be the utmost sanction that, under existing circumstances any British offi er will ever obtain from the Chinese Government, any impression to the contrary Captain Elliot may have conceived, notwithstanding, nor is it easy to understand upon what premises the assurances this officer holds out to the authorities at home have been built, when every previous experience went to shew only that a British authority might probably be suffered, but certainly not sanctioned, and when he had been gifted with prophecy, but this was not to be expected, the immediate future would have proved to him how far indeed the Chinese authorities were from sanctioning, in his own person, the reception of a magistrate from England, it being well known that the Chief Superintendent, unsuccessful in his endeavour to have any communication with the government, was obliged to retire again to Macao, whence he has hardly stirred during the last 10 months. We might remark upon other parts of these papers laid before parliament, but our space runs short, and we fear it is of little use now to write against measures which have by this time already been carried into effect, for it is not likely that, the act of Parliament once obtained, Ministers would allow their patronage to cool in the appointment of some one of their friends to the new judgeship at Canton.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—The demand for LONGCLOTHS is very languid, the dealers hands being quite full. COTTON YARN—we have heard of no further sale than the one reported last week of 1200 Peculs, good water twist Nos 16 @ 30 at 32 @ 33 $. The cheap price has caused some little enquiry for export to the Straits and Bombay. CHINTZES, the stock is rather heavy, and very low prices are offered for some suitable patterns and dimensions.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES have rather declined, but we hear of no sales. LONGELLS are rather firmer—resales however of about 2000 pieces have been made during the week at not better than 8½ to raise money, about 400 Pieces of inferior fetched only $ 7½.

METALS.—No alteration in price or demand.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER remains the same. BETELNUT is dull.

RICE,—the abundant supply of rain has reduced it to the former quotations.

COTTON.—There is very little alteration to notice. Prices continue nearly the same for the Bombay staple, but with rather more demand, and with perhaps a little advance on the better qualities. In Bengal nothing has been doing, indeed, the late arrivals not having yet discharged, there is little or none in first hands. The stock of Madras is also very short, but the former purchases cannot, we understand, be realized, except at a loss.

OPIUM.—There has been very little doing during the week, the brokers generally being afraid to appear. Prices therefore are nearly nominal, but there appears some little inclination to speculate in the Bengal drug, the supply on hand being moderate. The holders of Malwa appear rather desirous to realize. The deliveries to the 22nd were, Patna, old 23, new 365, Benares, old —, new 4; Malwa 197; Total 499 Chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—About 2,000 bales are reported to be down, and the holders do not relax in their demands of $ 600 and upwards, so that nothing has been done in it.

TEA.—Though some of the new black teas have arrived, no prices have yet been settled, except for some Orange Pekoe and Caper.

Cochinchina.

From a Correspondent.

It is well known that the present government has a well appointed navy, the largest and best armed in Eastern Asia. This year some petty acts of piracy had been committed on the coast, which so much incensed the King, that a large part of the fleet was immediately put under sailing orders; and, cruizing about the Paracels and other places, fell in with several craft from Haenan. There being some guns on board, these fishermen and traders were declared pirates, and brought in triumph to the harbour of Phuyen. In the mean while, an Amoy junk coming up from Singapore, happened to fall in with one of these cruizers, and was ordered to heave to. Upon refusing to comply with this request, the suspicion that this was a regular buccaneer increased, and she was finally boarded by force. The sailors, having been transported to the next military station, were put in prison, and the property was confiscated. The commander, however, was a very spirited man and drew up a suitable petition to the local authorities, wherein he explained the legality of his pursuits and also sent in the register of the junk with a permit to trade to the Southern seas. This document contains an order of Keën-lung addressed to all the prefects of the maritime provinces, to allow Chinese junks to sail to the Indian Archipelago, and puts the lawfulness of this trade beyond doubt. After a few weeks of delay, the magistrates finally set them free, but made them pay a heavy fine for not lowering immediately the sails, when the man of war ordered them to do so. They then reembarked their cargo, met with a very severe gale, lost their mast, and, being without water, abandoned the vessel and arrived entirely destitute at Keamoon.

It would appear that the Kingdom of Cochinchina exhibits despotism in its worst forms. The only rich man is the King, he has fine palaces, large treasures, excellent fortresses and vessels far superior to the navy of the Celestial Empire. The officers little share in this splendoor, but are the mere puppets of one man. The nation at large is in the most squalid condition, poor, wretched, and filthy in the extreme, and forced to give one third of its labour, or an equivalent, to the King. Few have more than a bare subsistence, and even if superior industry would enable them to amass a little property, the Mandarins would soon take possession of their trifling hoards. Yet this country confesses to be under the transforming influence of the Celestial Empire, and to be embued with the true principles of civilisation. Confucius is there as much conned as in the Celestial Empire, and notwithstanding the many radical notions of the sage, the many of the people labour under grinding tyranny. It is really extraordinary, that a monarch who, by sending down his ships to the Straits and even to Calcutta, and thereby giving a practical proof that he is fond of commercial intercourse, still proves hostile to ships which visit his ports. Though fear is at the bottom of all this, yet, if he would only take the trouble to survey the state of the world, for which he has the most ample means in his well stored library, he would find little reason to fear an attack upon his paltry dominions. It is as if all the nations which use the Chinese character had combined to exclude all the remaining part of the world from friendly intercourse, and whilst living like spiders, to abhor the contaminating influence of foreigners. Though China professes still the more enlarged views, especially when compared with Annam, (Cochinchina) Japan, and Korea, yet it shews its inconsistency that, whilst admiting the merchant, it forbids all exchange of thought between the flowery native and the outside barbarian. The Court of Hue, however, acts more considerately, and, whilst carefully keeping its subjects from all contact with the far travelled adventurers, it has scrupulously collected all possible knowledge of the west in the records of the palace. Thus we may find the works of Buffon with the latest treatise upon tactics, the best geographical works with maps and charts, while a steam boat is anchored at the water port of the royal abode. Taoukwang might as well follow the example of his southern brother and give at the same time his subjects the advantage of obtaining a more liberal idea of things in general.

MAJOR BENSON.

Private Letters from Moulmein are contradictory on the probable reception Major Benson will meet with, but the expectations of a peaceful issue to the controversy predominate. Tharawaddie has not yet surmounted the ill-will engendered amongst his people by the wanton execution of the heir apparent, and he dreads to brave us at such a juncture. With what shadow of security can we however place reliance on a submission so gained? and what a plea do we not give him for repudiating it at a more convenient season, by sending over so peculiar a present as the white Elephant, lately embarked from these shores, which the craftiness of the usurper will, no doubt, construe, when occasion requires, into a propitiatory offering to acquire again favour in his eyes? It ill assorts with the position and character of the British Indian Government to pursue a policy so hesitating and unduly conciliatory as we have of late shewn towards the usurper Court of Ava.—Spectator, July 28.

Spain.

We observe in a Cadiz paper "El Tiempo" of 31 May that in the Province of Cordova a new mine of Quicksilver has been discovered. The following is an abstract from the report made to the authorities by an exdepnty to the Cortes, Don Pedro Alcala Zamora.

The site of the discovery is near the upper falls of the river Guadajoz (the famous Salzum of the Romans), between the Caicena and the Salobral, where it runs paralell to unite with the Lucubin, between the villages of Castil de Campos and Fuente Tejar. Some women in collecting some white earth, generally used for the cleaning of their cooking utensils, observed in it something shining, which shewing to others, who took it to be silver, began to dig in the spot where this earth had been found. The soon found little globules of the size of snipeshot, which they found to be Quicksilver, and immediately gave up all further search, deeming the discovery of no value. Mr. Zamora, hearing of this circumstance, got two of the men who had been present before, to accompany him to the spot with their spades. This he found by the rains to be deprived of its covering of vegetable soil, and to present to the view a whitish earth. He directed the men to dig on in the hole already begun before, when he soon found imbedded in this earth some darker spots of a few inches in line, of a sandy calcareous earth, in which he found a great number of small globules of Quicksilver; these he collected, and sent as a sample, such as he found it, to the Deputation of the province of Cordova. It was expected that this discovery would lead to an important result.

We also find in another number of this paper an important Decree of the Spanish Government, which authorizes it to contract for a new loan of 500 millions reales de vellon, about 4 millions sterling, which was to be exclusively applied to the expenditure since the 1st of April of this year, and to the maintenance of the army—no part of it was to be applied to the liquidation of former debts. The produce of Quicksilver and lead of the mines of Almaden and Linares is to be set aside for the payment of the interest and capital of this loan.

The Government is at same time authorized to fund the dividends due on foreign loans.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON REGISTER.

Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in sending the particulars of our saving the crew of a Junk at sea, on board the "Sir Herbert Compton."

At noon 22nd September in Lat. 16, N. 115 E., observed a wreck to windward about 7 miles, made a tack, and stood towards it, when she proved a Chinese Junk, masts and rudder gone; passed close to her, and hove to, sent our boat on board, when they made the most urgent supplications to be admitted to come on board; from what I could understand she must have been in this state for three weeks. Took the whole of them, 56 in number; and, as the cargo was apparently of little value, abandoned her; and I have much gratification in having saved the lives of so many men from a certain death, as it came on to blow a severe gale that night, and they must all have been washed off her deck; I believe, from what I could get from them, they were bound from Hainan to Namoa.

I remain, Dear Sir,
Your's faithfully,
F. S BOULTON,
Commanding Sir H. Compton.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON REGISTER.

Dear Sir,—I arrived here this morning, and finding several reports in circulation respecting the loss of the "Barque Claremont," I beg to forward you the enclosed for your perusal, and will feel obliged by your stating the case in your paper. You will also confer a great favour on myself, officers, and crew by returning in your paper our very grateful acknowledgements to captain Arckoll, of the ship "La Belle Alliance," for his very great kindness to us during the time we were on board, for which we feel very grateful, I remain &c.

WM. HAWES,
Commander late Barque Claremont.

Markwick's Hotel, September 30th. 1838.

N. B.—All the crew and passengers saved—please return the enclosed.

We, the undersigned, make the following declaration, relative to the loss of the Barque "Claremont", to the best of our recollection.

That on the 22nd of September, in Lat. from 19° to 20°. N. and Long. about 114° 50', E. a gale of wind commenced from the Northward; made all snug by housing topgallant masts and flying jibboom, and reducing sail,—8 P. M. under a close reefed maintopsail on the larboard tack; one pump at work during the night; the gale encreasing, having veered to the N. E., and blowing in severe gusts with a heavy cross sea on, both pumps constantly going, the vessel shipping heavy seas; washed away the starboard quarter boat and several water casks from the deck.

September 23rd A. M. Wore ship, washed away the larboard quarter boat. The leak increasing, having five feet water in the hold; deemed it necessary to heave cargo overboard; after heaving fifty or sixty bales of cotton overboard, obliged to close the hatches, in consequence of the heavy seas shipped on board, and the water finding its way below. The gale blowing in violent gusts, and veering to East, blew away all our sails from the gaskets and yards, with exception of the foretopsail; washed away the bulwarks, poop cabins, and many of the spars from the deck. Midnight 8 feet water in the hold.

September 24th A. M. Wore ship, the wind hauling round to the Southward and moderating; a heavy sea running, and seas washing over the vessel; found she had settled considerably. Got out the long boat and veered her astern with provisions. After using every endeavour to save the vessel, finding her fast sinking, we were compelled to abandon her, having got all the crew into the long boat, the vessel in two or three minutes went down. The logbook was washed away with the cabins; the only cargo savel is four bundles of pearls. After being in the boat about four hours, we were picked up by the ship La belle Alliance, Capt. Arckoll. (Signed) H. H. Ager, 2nd Officer.

September 24th 1838. James Barretto, 1st do.
On board ship Wm. Hawes,
La Belle Alliance Commander.

Morrison Education Society.

The annual General Meeting of the Morrison Education Society was held in the Rooms of the General Chamber of Commerce, Canton, on Wednesday, the 3d of October, 1838, at 11 A. M. Present: Messrs Dent, Green, Lindsay, Innes, A. Matheson, Dinshaw Furdoonjee, Moller, J. R. Robertson, Wetmore, Slade, Williams, Fessenden Bridgman, and Morrison.

The Chair was taken by Lancelot Dent, Esq. as President, by whom the nature of the Society's operations during the past year, and of its expectations for the future, were briefly stated.

The Report of the Trustees was then read by Mr. Bridgman, as Corresponding Secretary, and of this we give in the following abstract, the principal heads.

"When in European countries institutions for the education of the young are about to be established, such projects are more apt to engage the attention of the public, which is more able from its own observation to appreciate the advantages thereof; consequently the means are easily procured, and both teachers and pupils are found without difficulty. In China, however, things are different;—not only do the natives, though many thousands of their children have not the means of obtaining education, not seek instruction at the hands of the Society, but it is likewise difficult to obtain the means for teaching from the want of elementary schoolbooks, of teachers, and of a good method of teaching. The necessity there is for good teachers is great, and ought to be remedied by all means; these ought to be natives well acquainted with their own language and institutions as well as with the principles of science. One great object of the Society would be attained if only a few individuals received a good education for the ordinary pursuits of life, but much more desirable would it be if the children educated through the means of this Society were to become teachers in their turn, and thus widen continually the sphere of the Society's influence. To this object the efforts of the Schools for Chinese established hitherto by foreigners, seem not to have been directed, and the cause of their limited success may be ascribed to the difficulty, nay, even impossibility, hitherto of procuring able teachers, a want, though often felt, that has not been remedied.

"The society applied in the first instance to Professors Silliman, Goodrich and Gibbs of Yale College, and these gentlemen had in two instances engaged the services of young men well qualified for this purpose, but in one instance the departure of the teacher was prevented by obstacles of a domestic nature, and in the other by the individual being unfortunately afflicted with a disease of the eyes that threatened total blindness, and rendered him unfit for the performance of the duties assigned to him. The professors however were actively seeking for another person to send out without delay. The application in England for a teacher was made to the British and Foreign School Society, and an answer may be expected on the return of Mr. Fox, one of the original trustees of this society.

"The Secretary then stated that the society had received a letter from Lieut. Bolleau regarding the great progress made in India in the education of the natives, for which, a short time ago, no more was done in India than is now done in China.

"Mr. Bridgman then stated that of the 5 boys which were on the society's list at the last anniversary, four continued in their respective courses of study, and one other had been received, as well as applications for the admission of three others which were however necessarily refused from the want of teachers.

"Of the two boys sent to Singapore one continues his studies there, and the most favorable accounts of the progress he is making have been received, which lead the Society to hope that he will become an able teacher in due time. The other has returned to China where he continues his studies of geography, arithmetic, natural history and grammar. He reads English and Chinese with ease, and has short exercises in translating these languages. In his other studies he has also made some progress, and is besides employed as usher to two other boys less advanced than himself, and who are chiefly employed in learning to write and read Chinese and English—they have made same progress in the study of geography and arithmetic. Little has yet been done for the fifth boy who is only seven years old, from the dready complained of want of a teacher, which if remedied, would allow of some more boys being immediately put under his care. The sixth on the list is a youth who has been received this year, is studying the rudiments of the English language and of the healing art under the care of Dr. Parker, and is daily employed in the Hospital as an assistant. He has some knowledge of Chinese literature, and has good natural abilities joined to an enquiring diiposition, on which account his teacher entertains a very favorable opinion as to his future progress. His attention as well as that of the other boys is daily directed to the truths of natural and revealed religion, and to the ultimate destiny of man.

"Mr. Bridgman then explained the engagement taken by the Society, where children were placed by them in schools over which they had no controul, which was, that, considering themselves as guardians of the children, they were placed in the school chosen under the entire direction of its officers, giving them at same time the necessary pecuniary means and such counsel as they think conducive to securing the children's continuance in school through their course of study, it being of course the care of the Trustees that the proper schools be selected and the necessary instruction be provided, and that the children may not leave the school before their education be completed.

"After some remarks on the impropriety of tempting parents to send their boys for education, by bribes of money, the secretary went into details of the last year's expenditure of which the principal items are: The maintainance of the pupils, being $ 12 per month; to the school at Macao, and to the Singapore Institution school $ 15 per month to each.

"Mr. Bridgman then gave an account of the state of the school at Macao, under Mrs. Gutzlaff's management, as stated to the Committee by the revd. Mr. Gutzlaff, from which it appears that it now contains 16 boys and five girls, living in his house and receiving both food and raiment. A great difficulty was experienced in retaining the children at school, particularly the girls, who were generally very soon taken back by their parents. Of the boys fewer withdrawals have taken place this year than heretofore, and the applications for admission of others have been numerous. The secretary stated that the Committee still continued paying $ 15 per month towards the expenses of this school, though it was conducted, chiefly with regard to the obtaining of pupils, on a principle of which they did not approve unwilling to damp the ardour with which the school was commenced.

"The Secretary then took a brief survey of the state of the Singapore institution school.

"The trustees have not yet been able to procure accurate accounts of the state of education of the Chinese beyond the boundaries of the Empire, full accounts of the proceedings of the schools in Singapore, Malacca, Pinang, Rhio, Bankok, and other places are much needed, in order to know how education is speeding. Some account of the education among the Chinese at Bankok has been received, which represent it to be in a very low condition owing to the want of good teachers, who but rarely emigrate from China; the defective state of education is in part also produced by the low remuneration given to the teacher, and by the indifference evinced to the progress of the children by their parents.

"After some general remarks on the state of education in China Mr. Bridgman concluded the report by stating that the library of the Society had been opened in a convenient apartment, for the accomodation of the books already collected, amounting to about 2000 volumes, and is now easy of access to all. The trustees recommend the early adoption of measures for it's enlargement."

After the reading of the Report, the Chairman having explained that an irregularity had taken place in the appointment by the Trustees, of Mr. Wetmore, as provisional Auditor, in consequence of the absence from Canton of one of the Auditors appointed at the last meeting; it was

On the motion of J. R. Robertson, Esq., seconded by E. Moller, Esq.

Resolved, That the provisional appointment of an Auditor, which has been made by the Trustees, be approved by this meeting.

It was next, on the motion of Dinshaw Furdoonjee, Esq., seconded by S. W. Williams, Esq.

Resolved. That the Report which has been read be approved and accepted.

The President explained, with reference to a motion for the adoption of a new Bye-Law in regard to schools, of which notice had been given at the last General meeting, and to which, as required by the Society's rules, the approval of the Trustees had been accorded, that Mr. King, the original mover, being absent, the motion would be brought forward by Mr. Williams. It was then—

On the motion of S. W. Williams, Esq., seconded by H. H. Lindsay, Esq.

Resolved.—That all Societies or Individuals, applying for the assistance of this Association, shall be expected to exhibit statements of their receipts and expenditure for purposes of education, as well as of their systems of instruction, and to continue the same regularly, so long as the Society's aid shall be afforded: also, that any member of the Committee of Trustees, present in any place where such schools may be established, shall be considered a visitor of the schools.

Resolved. That this become a By-Law of the Society.

On the motion of H. H. Lindsay, Esq., seconded by James Innes, Esq., it was

Resolved. That the Trustees be instructed to solicit from the Teachers and Directors of all Schools for the Chinese beyond the boundaries of the empire, and especially of such schools or other institutions as may be established on the frontiers between Russia and China, full accounts of their origin, progress and present state.

On the motion of Alexander Matheson, Esq., seconded by J. C. Green, Esq., it was

Resolved.—That the Trustees be authorized to purchase as specimens, copies of all the Text-books used in Chinese schools beyond the boundaries of the empire, to be deposited in the library; also, that they be requested to bring forward at the next anniversary meeting, suggestions for the improvement of works of this class.

On the motion of James Innes, Esq., seconded by W. S. Wetmore, Esq., it was Resolved.—That this Society views with approbation the measures adopted by the Trustees for rendering its Library of easy access to the community in general; and that it looks to its members and friends individually, for contributions of books to increase the value and utility of the Library.

After some discussion in regard to the propriety of continuing further assistance to the school at Macao, now in part supported by the Society, it was

On the motion of J. C. Green esq., seconded by James Innes esq.,

Resolved.—That, with reference to affording further aid to the School at Macao, under the management of Mrs. Gutzlaff, the Trustees be instructed to take such measures as they may deem expedient, with the sole restriction, that no assistance whatever shall be rendered, till it be satisfactorily ascertained that the objectionable mode of obtaining scholars has been abandoned, and till suitable security be obtained that this mode will not again be resorted to.

The members present then proceeded to ballot for officers for the ensuing year. The result of the scrutiny was as follows:

Steam-navigation to China.

A Public meeting, convened by James Innes, esq., in order to take into consideration certain suggestions of Mr. Waghorn in regard to communication by steam between China and Point de Galle, was held in the rooms of the General Chamber of Commerce, Canton, on Wednesday, the 3rd, of October, 1838, at 1 P. M. Present: Messrs. Dent, Wetmore, Green, A. Matheson, Lindsay, Dinshaw Pestonjee, Bridgman, J. R. Robertson, Slade, Fessenden, Moller, Williams, Innes, and Morrison.

On the motion of H. H. Lindsay, esq., seconded by L. Dent, esq., Mr. Wetmore was requested to take the chair.

Mr. Innes having explained to the meeting that it had been convened at the request of that enterprizing individual Mr. Waghorn, for the purpose above-stated, he then laid upon the table the following letter from Mr. Waghorn to the English merchants and other in China.

INDIA STEAM AGENCY OFFICE, CAIRO JUNE 11, 1838.

To,

THE ENGLISH AND OTHER EUROPEAN MERCHANTS AND INTERESTS IN CHINA.

Dear Gentlemen,

Ere this reaches you the "Semiramis" Steam vessel, will have opened Steam Navigation between Suez and Calcutta via Point de Galle.

The time then is come for you to establish a chain of Steam Communication between Canton and Galle, and thus identify and connect China with the Calcutta line at that place. There are many advantages attendant upon such an establishment not only to your own Commercial pursuits, but also to every other relation connected between Europe and China, all so evident to the Politician, Merchant, and Individual, that it would be loss of time my dilating or dwelling upon them. I therefore will at once go to the outline of a plan, in my opinion, best adapted for the outset of Steam Navigation between China and England.

One vessel is sufficient to begin with, making quarterly trips between Galle and Canton, in dates suited to meet the Calcutta Steame at Galle.

Such a vessel should be about 800 tons with engines of 220 horse power, with space for 100 Tons of valuable Freight, touching both ways at Singapore for fuel, letters, passengers, &c. &c.

Raise £50,000, in shares, to pay for this first vessel, and for a year's coal at Galle, Singapore, and Canton.

Let this vessel be built by first rate builders and fitted by a first rate engineer; let any future vessels that you may be disposed to put upon the line be exactly upon the same principle and size &c. &c., so that what is serviceable for one of your Steam vessels, always may be applied to the others.

Of course, the Calcutta line cannot long remain, with one solitary Steam vessel between there and Suez. Another and another will soon be put on, and after they are, it will be for yourselves to put on a second vessel and have more frequent trips between you and Galle.

Java as a matter of course will connect herself with your line at Singapore, so will New Holland, and by and bye Australia, and many other places in the East.

Steam Navigation has already added as much, perhaps more to England's greatness than any other science except education God has given to man. Its advantages to our Chinese connections are yet to be practically developed; in my opinion the socialityit will bring about, will, ere some 30 years hence, induce a British Vice-Roy of India to pay a visit of friendship via Steam to His Celestial Majesty in China.

When the writer began his advocacy of Steam Navigation between England and India, he found the Directors of the East India Company opposed to any thing of that nature with India. He found H. M. P. Office Department averse to Steam vessels as Packets. He found the Admiralty of opinion, "that the Government thought of doing away with theirs, because they were not safe in bad weather." He found himself deemed a visionary, nay, a madman by the Governments Officials for maintaining that Steam could go easily in 50 days between India and England via the Red Sea. It must not be surprising if some little egotism has crept into his own opinions, now that he has lived to see the matter compassed with ease in 40 days, and speedily it will be reduced 3 days more in Egypt, when the Government and Company do the needful in that country.

The above statement is made to give you an earnest of his future labors, to assist and devote himself to such an object with China as in like manner he devoted himself to get it to India. Having seen it done to India, he now looks onwards to China, and hopes to see you all "doing" towards its being done, between Canton and London in 55 days—via Galle.

At present it would be superfluous to say more, except, if you invite me, I am ready to come to you if you do not like to send me your instructions without, under a Committee to be appointed by you in London.

My wish is to be intrusted with the placing a first Steam vessel between Galle and Canton (as I would call at Galle on the way out) to bring you the first Mail by the Red Sea. All this would be gratifying to me, and I particularly wish to be instrumental in doing it.

I remain,

Dest. Gentlemen,

Your faithful Servant,

THO. WAGHORN.

Mr. Dent, then rose and said. That having been in India at the time Mr. Waghorn was urging his views for the communication between England and India via the Red Sea, which were then deemed quite visionary, and which had since been carried into such full operation, he had the more hesitation in giving the present Propositions a decided negative. The plan contemplates the running of a steamer, costing £50,000, with a years supply of coal between China and Point de Galle via Singapore. This would be available for nothing but letters and Passengers; independent of the heavy expense, thus incurred the greatest uncertainty would always attend the falling in with the other steamers at Galle. But hitherto even the comprehensive line, as it is called, between Calcutta and the Red Sea has not, as anticipated, been opened, and until that is done and that it is further extended to Singapore from Calcutta, as it must ultimately, (and at no distant period he believed,) he thought it premature to attempt any thing here. Beyond Singapore no aid could be expected from Government, but treasure and opium freight would no doubt fully support a steamer from China to the Straits and complete the line of communication.

Some discussion ensued upon the question, whether a communication with Calcutta, or Bombay, in place of Point de Galle, may not practicable. These questions having been answered in the negative, it was.

On the motion of Lancelot Dent, esq., seconded by A. Matheson, esq.,

Resolved.—That this meeting fully and thankfully appreciates the interest shown by Mr. Waghorn in the object of communication by steam between this country and Europe; but that it deems his present proposition premature, and, until such communication shall be assured as far as to Singapore, impracticable.

On the motion of J. C. Green, esq., seconded by H. H. Lindsay, esq., it was Resolved.—That the thanks of this meeting be returned to Mr. Innes for the interest he has taken in this subject.

On the motion of L. Dent, esq., seconded by James Innes, esq., the thanks of the meeting were returned to Mr. Wetmore for his services in the chair.

The meeting was then dissolved.

Kinqua-Affair.

VICE-ROY IN REPLY TO PARSEE PETITION RESPECTING KIN-QUA'S DEBTS.

On the 7th day, of the 8th moon, of the 18th year of Taoukwang the Indian merchants Nanabhoy Framjee and others presented the following petition:

"On the 23rd day of the 7th moon, we received, "by the hands of the Hong merchants, Your Ex- "cellency's edict respecting our claims, in which "your Excy. directs the Namhoy-yuen to apprehend "Kinqua, and commands the Senior Hong mer- "chants, conjointly to deliberate and come to some "just and reasonable arrangement with us, for "which kindness we shall ever be grateful."

"It is now several tens of years, since we first "traded with Kinqua, and we have always found "him reasonable and trustworthy, and experienced "mutual satisfaction. Were we now, therefore, to "drive him to bankrupty, by pressing our claims "against him, truly our hearts would be ill at ease. "We have met over and over again to consult upon "the matter and have had repeatedly to express our "gratitude to Y. E. for your kindness in urging the "Hong merchants to settle with us. As no better "terms can be obtained for the payment of our "claims against the Teenpo Hong, we must even "submit to the other arrangement viz. that the "principal be paid in ten years and the interest in "two years after the expiration of that term. In "this concession we have been influenced by our "desire to support the Hong, but, had it failed, we "should most decidedly have refused the ten-years "arrangement, and have insisted on quicker pay- "ment. As it is, we have all signed our names to "the agreement."

"We now petition to express our gratitude to "Y. E for hastening this settlement; and also, "earnestly, to entreat Y. E. to direct the Namhoy- "yuen to liberate the Hong merchant Kinqua that "he may resume the management of his affairs."

This petition coming before me, the Governor, I find that Kinqua of the Teempo Hong having traded with the foreigners for many years, and having always been found honorable and trustworthy, they, the foreigners, not wishing to force the Hong to bankruptcy by pressing the claims, have agreed to the arrangement that the principal be paid in ten years, and the interest in two after the expiration of that period: and they also earnestly beg that I will order the Hong merchant Kinqua to be released that he may resume the management of his affairs. By this I perceive that the foreign merchants are really most just and reasonable in their disposition, and not like those who obstinately persist in error. I consider their conduct worthy of praise, and have, in compliance with their prayer, directed the Namhoy-yuen release the Hong merchant Kinqua from his custody, and report same to me.

Hereafter all foreigners trading with the Hong merchants must annually close their accounts; large debts must not be allowed to accumulate: and when money is due to them, which they cannot recover, they must instantly petition me on the subject. If they allow, as formerly, debts of thousands and tens of thousands, to accumulate, and then only petition, truly they must bear the evils brought upon themselves the best way they can, and recover their claims by themselves for I the Governor will not interfere, my regard for them leads me to give them this timely warning and advice, that they may not again fall into error considering the circumstances I issue this edict: when it reaches the Senior Hong merchants, let them forward it to the said foreigners, for their implicit obedience.

Now the Hong merchant Kinqua in consequence of his bad management has contracted large debts to the foreigners, and I, the Governor, against my inclination, but in consideration of the foreigners kindness, in pleading for him, have remitted his punishment and forgiven his crimes. But let not this be hereafter quoted as a precedent and law. If among the Hong merchants there be any so unmindful of his own character as to think that because Kinqua escaped unpunished for his crimes, he may act in the same disgraceful manner, that he may fearlessly involve people and contract debts to be paid by others, that he may incur debts of thousands and tens of thousands, and swindle to any extent, truly he is both single minded and short-sighted, for I, the Governor, will assuredly apprehend and punish such with the greatest rigour. Should the creditors then, as now, petition for his release, they will, tho' meaning kindly, only foster rascality, and I, the Governor, will not listen to them,

Let the Hong merchants forthwith send copies of this Edict to each of the foreigners for their information, that they may hereafter avoid the like error.

Haste! Haste! A special Edict.

Taou-kwang, 18th year, 8th moon, 9th day,
September 28th 1838.

S. FEARON.
Chinese Interpreter to the General Chamber of Commerce.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 6th October.

We give in another column a report of a meeting held on Wednesday last in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, at the invitation of Mr. Innes, to lay before the community a letter from Mr. Waghorn, regarding steam communication between Point de Galle and China. It will be seen from the proceedings of the meeting that Mr. Waghorn's call upon our neighbours has not been responded to for the present, which indeed might be expected, the foreign community here being too limited to enable them to obtain a profitable return for the immense outlay Mr. Waghorn considers necessary for the purchasing and providing with coal of the first steamer. The expense is estimated at 50,000 £ or 250,000 $. The vessel would consequently cost 30,000 $ per annum only for interest—the expense of sailing her, insurance, incidental expenses, repairs etc. etc, cannot be less than 50,000$ more without even calculating wear and tear, thus requiring that she should make, in each of her four trips per annum, 20,000$ in freightand passage money, to avoid loss. As to cargo, of which the vessel will be able to take 100 tons only, however valuable, that would but pay a small share of the sum required, the more so as there are no exports from Ceylon to China worth mentioning. As to shipping treasure from China to Bombay, by way of Galle, people will generally prefer to send direct, to being subject to extra charges and insurance, without even the advantage of a certainty of greater speed than by the ordinary sailing vessels, since, even after the establishment of the comprehensive steam-navigation plan, the boat from China will not always arrive at Galle at the moment of a steam boat starting either for Bombay or Calcutta, and much delay may then be the consequence. As to passengers being so many as to defray any great portion of the charges, it must not be expected, the foreign community being very small in number, and China offering but little temptation to the tourist or the invalid for a visit. In thus pointing out the obstacles there exist at present against connecting China with India and Europe by steam-navigation, we are nevertheless very sensible to the advantages that will no doubt be therefrom derived at a future period, when increased foreign intercourse with China shall have drawn to it a greater number of visitors, and when, as there is every reason to believe will soon be effected, the saving of fuel in steamboats shall be such as not only considerably to reduce their expense, but likewise to allow of their being carrying vessels which on long voyager, at present, they can hardly be. Though we do not for these reasons concur in Mr. Waghorn's ideas, we think the public is nevertheless obliged to him for keeping this subject alive, nor do we despair, some day or other, to see all his expectations realized, though the time be not yet come. Steam navigation, before it reaches China, will have to become naturalized in India and the Straits, were it is yet in its infancy. Besides a few stermers employed in the Hooghly, and those now plying between Bombay and Suez, there are none to facilitate the intercourse on the coasts of the immense Indian empire—the Straits, from their generally smooth sea, and many points at which vessels may touch, so peculiary fitted for Steam-navigation, have hitherto to boast of an occasional visit only of a Government steamer, whilst they enter- tain no intercourse by means of steam with the neighbouring islands and Java, where again we find a few small steamers belonging to the Dutch Government, and chiefly employed in the transport of troops. A line of steamers to ply between Calcutta, Maulmein, Penang, Malacca and Singapore, or even Java, would, we think, be certain to find sufficient employment, nor need these vessels be of so expensive as kind as that contemplated by Mr. Waghorn for the boisterous China Sea. If such a line be once established, it is very probable that China will come in for a share of the benefits to be therefrom derived, by Calcutta sending Opium for transshipment to Singapore, and China her bullion to the same port to expedite its remittance to Calcutta. Many probably would be the passengers that in search of health would leave Calcutta for a season for the Straits.

A petition was offered at the City-gate on saturday last, complaining of the Hoppo's officers classing all white Longcloths as first quality and levying the duty thereon accordingly, though they did not even have the bales opened to look at the quality. An answer to this petition has been received in which, we understand, the Viceroy upbraids the petitioners as if it were their fault that no inspection of the goods took place, and stating as usual that the established law on the subject should not be departed from. It is hoped that this correspondence will have the desired effect of classing Longcloths in future for duty, as heretofore, according to their qualities, and we understand that the Hong merchants, with whom this subject ought to be of equal importance with foreigners, met in consoo yesterday to delibe- rate on measures to protect their interests. We think the matter of sufficient importance to engage the attention of the Chamber of Commerce, since, by the Custom house extorting the higher duty on all Longcloths, the half dollar, which on the second quality ought to go to the Hong-yune, and be applied towards the payment of the Hong debts, thus goes into the public treasury instead of, as by right it should to do, going into the pockets of the Hong creditors.

An inside fast boat from Macao, with two foreigners, passengers, on board, was, when close to Canton, surrounded by five mandarin boats, whose officers insisted on searching for contraband. This irregular proceeding was opposed by the Chinese boatmen of the fast boat and a scuffle ensued, which threatened to have serious consequences, as knives were drawn by the people of the mandarins, of two of which one of the passengers disarmed one mar. The mandarins were finally repulsed, and the boat arrived safely opposite the factories. A representation against this unauthorized violence was immediately made to the authorities, and it is hoped that the bamboo will become acquainted with some of the backs of the offenders.

We have received a letter signed A. B. concerning the non-fulfilment of contract of a certain ship, in not proceeding direct to her port of destination. Though we concur with the writer in his remarks on the wrongs inflicted on shippers of goods by such disregard of contract, it cannot be expected that we should give publicity to a particular case of this kind, of which we, personally, know nothing more than what we are told in an anonymous letter.

The Governor, it will be seen from his edict in another column, has been highly pleased by a little well applied flattery from our Parsee neighbours, which he hastens to return in kind. This is the politest document with reference to foreigners, ever yet issued by Chinese authorities.

In another column will be found the proceedings at a meeting held on Wednesday last by the members of the Morrison Education Society.

The third number of Aesop's fables in the Chinese language, containing 24 fables, has lately appeared, and they are much read and admired by the Chinese, which proves the very able manner in which they have been adapted to the Chinese idiom. As an illustration of how well they are understood by the Chinese, a friend has favored us with a version of one of the fables (canis parturiens) as vocally delivered to him in Anglo Chinese by an intelligent Chinese, and which we insert here as a specimen of this elegant jargon.

"Before one time, have got one dog wife, wantshee makee that childoh, no got house putee, only he sabbee other dog wife have house he own, no got childoh, he talkee he so fashion: "My friend, you "just now no occasion you house, my wantshee "makee that childoh, s'pose you lend my he littee "time, puttee my childoh inside, my too much "chinchin for you." He frien' countee number one foolo, pay he house mas kee. After long time he see that childo have catchee large, allo proper, only makee too much bow wow, he show he friend: "My friend just now your childoh countee can "pass, you no occasion my house, more better you "pay my back, countee settee!" Only he, that other dog wife, he inside countee number one kwaisai! he show he: "Suppose you can puttee my along "my childoh outside, countee you good chance, "suppose my along my childoh puttee you out- "side, countee all same spoil him pigeon for you!" (Moral) My own have see too much man do all same same kwai sai pigeon for he!"

Contrary to the prognostications of the Anglo Chinese Calendar, the invisible partial Eclipse of the moon on the 3d inst, was a nearly total eclipse, which lasted more than two hours, during which the Chinese, with innumerable gongs and other noisy instruments, attempted to prevent the celestial dog from swallowing the moon, and succeeded in driving him off his prey some time after midnight.

Rump, Commander, fell in with a China Junk in Latitude 18° 59' N. and Longitude 117° 42' E. under Jury masts at anchor in 58 fthm. water; sent the Cutter on board, found no one there, opened the hatches and found her cargo all in a good state consisting of Sugar, Hemp, Rice, Oil, Sago, and other various small packages. The only cash we were able to find was some few bundles of China pice. With light variable airs and the night coming on, and no spare room for the Junk's cargo, proceeded on, plenty of water on board, also rats out of number. It is the Captain's opinion that she could have been deserted by the crew only for some few days, as the Main and Fore Mast which had been cut away was quite fresh."

From the nature of the Cargo we presume the Junk to have been bound from Manila or some port in the Philippine Islands, to China.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There has been very little doing in LONG-CLOTHS during the week. Greys may be quoted 3.75 @ 4 and white 4 @ 4½. In consequence of the endless disputes regarding the quality of Longcloths between the importers and mandarins, we hear that an attempt is making to fix all greys as No. 3 and whites ½ as No. 4 and ½ as No. 2, which, if assented to, will, on the whole, be a favorable arrangement. There is a little more firmness in COTTON YARN, and we hear of a sale of a small lot of 50 bales Nos. 18 @ 42. being an average of about $ 30 @ 36, the quality good, the lower numbers under 32. watertwist. Several parcels have been purchased for the Straits and India but we could not learn the particulars. In our last week's report the numbers of the 1400 Peculs sold @ $ 32 @ 33, should have been 16 @ 30, not 16 @ 50.

WOOLLENS.—There has been no transaction in SPANISH STRIPES reported to us, but the demand is better. LONGELLS, are also firmer, although 2 or 3000 pieces were sold by the Chinese at low rates lately, there being a settling day among them two or three days since.

METALS.—We hear of no transactions.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, has declined in consequence of the importation of 5 @ 6000 Piculs, and cannot be quoted higher than 7¼ @ 7½. BETELNUT, remains as before $ 3 @ 3½.

RICE.—The weather, it is said, is most favorable for the next crop, and prices therefore remain very low.

SANDALWOOD.—About 4000 Piculs of Company's quality was sold at Macao in the early part of the week at $ 19, which shows some improvement.

COTTONS.—The market generally remains the same as to prices, but there has been more enquiry for Bombay Cotton, and 4 @ 5000 bales middling to fair quality have been disposed of during the week. The finer descriptions, from the short quantity here, inclined to advance a little, the common kinds without alteration. No transactions have taken place in Bengal or Madras Cottor, the cheapness directing attention more to the Bombay staple. Accounts may now be shortly expected of the produce of the Nankin crop, which will have considerable influence on the market.

OPIUM.—Few or no brokers have made their appearance during the week, and nothing has been doing. Malwa keeps low, 560 @ 570,—the Chinese selling off their time barquing. Patna is nominal 580 @ 590, being in few hands, but no buyers, the deliveries both outside and at Whampoa being for the present stopped. For those of last month see above.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Nothing yet doing in Nankin Silk, the holders still demanding such exorbitant prices. We do not hear of any further supplies being down.

TEAS.—We hear of no transaction in the tea-market, except the purchase of a few chops of Caper at rather lower prices.

Canton, 6th October 1838.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—Both Grey and White Longcloths are rather lower, so many being thrown upon the market and several small sales have been made during the week of the former at 3.75, and of the latter at 4¼. Cotton Yarn of common quality continues almost unsaleable. A considerable sale of good was reported to us yesterday, but we could not obtain the exact terms. The quantity was about 1000 Piculs No. 16 @ 30—the price not under $ 34.

Woollens.—Spanish Stripes continue at the same quotations, but without active demand. Longells, are rather lower both for scarlets and assorted colors. Camlets without much enquiry, and no sales are reported of either Dutch or English, holders looking for an advance.

Metals. Lead and Iron are both rather down—several parcels offering.

Straits Produce.—Pepper is not in so brisk demand, but it would fetch still 7½, the supply being very short. There has been no further sale of Betelnut, the price of which will greatly depend on the supply, which at present would appear likely to be rather short. Tin and Rattans without alteration.

Rice,—is stationary at our low quotations, but as rain is required it may advance a little from the want of it.

Cotton.—There is no alteration in either price or demand, and no sales of any sort have been effected. The Bombay is taken off in small lots, the good quality at from 8. 7 @ 9. 3, and very little of the fine is now here. The lower descriptions sell from 7 @ 8. 3. In Madras and Bengal nothing has been done during the week. The clearances in the last 4 weeks are reported at

20,500	2500	600	23,680 Bales.

Nothing is yet known of the Nankin crop, but accounts may now be shortly expected.

Opium.—In addition to the seizure of the small dealers and smokers in Canton, some disturbance took place in the early part of the week between the Mandarins and villagers on shore at Whampoa, which at first was expected would seriously interfere with the Opium-trade, but it has been arranged. The brokers however are still alarmed and have, we believe, got rid of all their purchases, so that, when the market again opens, a good demand may be expected. Malwa has been sold as low as 560; it is now held a little higher. Patna has been firmer @ 570 @ 580. being in few hands. The deliveries to the 15th were, Patna old 27; new 296; Benares, old—; new, 4; Malwa, 71; Total 32 8 chests.

EXPORTS.

Nankin Silk.—The Chinese still maintain that the supply will fall short of last year, and are still demanding upwards of $ 600 for their new silk, but there are no purchasers.

Tea.—We hear of no transaction, and our quotations are altogether nominal.

General Chamber of Commerce. By order of the Committee

Canton, 25th September, 1838. WILLIAM SCOTT, Secretary.

PAPERS RELATIVE TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A COURT OF JUDICATURE IN CHINA.

Presented to the House of Commons by Her Majesty.

No. 7.

Captain Elliot to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received June 22, 1837.)

(Extract.) Macao January 23 1837.

HIS Excellency the Governor [in a memorial to the Emperor on the subject of Captain Elliot's being permitted to reside at Canton] plainly signifies that he is sensible the formal admission of an officer is a novel principle; but he nevertheless urges its adoption upon the ground that it is needful to wave something in point of form and ancient custom, for the sake of preserving a state of peaceful order at Canton.

No. 8.

(Extract.) Canton, June 2, 1837.

IN concluding this despatch I venture to offer my humble opinion (strengthening by every day's experience in the country) that there is an increasing disposition upon the part of the Chinese Government, to conciliate that of His Majesty.

No. 9.

My Lord, Canton, June 2, 1837.

This may be a convenient occasion respectfully to press the necessity for the early establishment of some formal and efficacious means of maintaining a state of good order amongst His Majesty's subjects in this country, and for the adjustment of disputes involving claims of money which may arise upon the spot.

On the very day on which this despatch is dated, a British subject has succeeded in making his escape from this country after having defrauded two industrious Englishmen, keeping a store in Canton, to a considerable extent; and I am sorry to add, leaving unpaid accounts to Chinese shopkeepers, amounting, as it already appears, to more than 1000 dollars.

I sincerely hope that examples of this kind may be of rare occurrence, but it must be admitted that there is no country in which fraud of this kind is easier of successful accomplishment than China, or in which its utmost practicable prevention is of greater public moment; and let me add, no country where the Government will be found more ready to leave to Foreign Powers unobstructed facilities for the upholding of a more creditable condition of circumstances amongst all those over whom they have a natural right to interpose such authority.

I presume to trouble your Lordship with the accompanying short memorandum of suggestions upon this subject: and I have the honor to remain, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT,
Chief Superintendent.

ENCLOSURE IN No. 9

Memorandum of Suggestions concerning the establishment of fit Regulations for the Government of His Majesty's Subjects in China.

(Extract.)

THE necessity for the existence of some efficacious means of maintaining a state of good order amongst His Majesty's subjects resorting to China by regulations lawfully sanctioned in England arises from the extreme inconvenience and hazard of leaving that object to be secured by the operation of the native laws. Partly from motives of a just and rational nature, but principally perhaps from a desire to avoid serious disputes with Great Britain, it may be depended upon that the Chinese Government is willing and anxious to devolve upon that of His Majesty the task of ordering these things according to its own pleasure: indeed I have already ascertained that there would be no difficulty in securing from the Provincial Government, an Edict declaratory of its consent to the establishment of police and judicial institutions.

A homicide is the only conceivable case in which the Chinese authorities would attempt to interfere; and I feel assured it would be easy to draw the disposal of that charge within the competency of our own tribunal.

I will only further preface these suggestions with the remark, that no circumstance seems to be better calculated to relax the anti-social jealousy and alarm of the Chinese than the existence of adequate regulations for the repression of disorder.

No.

My Lord, Canton, September 1837.

AN accident of a serious nature has just occured at this place, and being apprehensive that unfounded and disquieting reports may reach England upon the subject, I forward this despatch by a ship bound to Bombay, in the hope of saving the December overland mail.

Two Lascars belonging to an English passage boat landed on the evening of the 20th instant, on the north shore of the river, about two miles below the factories; and a fray took place, in which a Chinese was declared to have received several severe stabs with a knife.

There were two other Lascars on shore at the same place, and although it does not seem that they were engaged in the affair, they with the two principals fell into the hands of the Chinese Police: and the whole four were brought up to this place, and confined in the Consoo-house.

On the morning of the next day, (the 21st) the magistrate in whose district the disturbance ocurred, sent them to me for examination, but declined to leave them in my hands.

I had no strong objection they should remain in the custody of the Mandarins at the Consoo house during the daytime, because I could always know whether they were removed within the walls of the city, and then transmit the most urgent appeals for their immediate delivery to my care: but as night approached, and it would be difficult to watch proceedings, other steps became necessary.

At 8 o'clock, therefore, I sent for the three official merchants to the hall, and demanded that the men should be given up before 10 o'clock that night, upon my pledge that they should be fairly tried according to the laws of my country, and in the presence of Mandarins, for any crime alleged against them.

Howqua replied with composure, that these persons were in the custody of the Mandarins, charged with a violation of the laws of the Empire, and pending the determination of the safety of a Chinese who had been severely stabbed by one amongst them. If Englishmen went to France, he argued, they were amenable to the justice of that country; and then taking this rather displeasing occasion to compliment me upon a presumed reasonableness of disposition, and love of justice, which he said had secured for me the respect of the Governor, he required me to show why the case should be different when Englishmen came to China.

I answered, that I would venture to say my Government would admit all the force of this reasoning, as soon as it could be made at all applicable by the Emperor's gracious will to place my countrymen on the like footing in China, with respect to freedom of intercouse, and the equal administration of the laws, with that on which they stood in France, considered with relation to those points.

There was no pretension in England, he might assure himself, to dictate any change of policy to the Chinese; that was a high matter which depended upon the Imperial wisdom and pleasure: but it was not to be denied that the present state of things was attended with great inconveniences, and one amongst them was the utter impossibility to concede their right to try British subjects for a breach of Chinese laws, by Chinese Officers, whilst those laws were only partially administered towards them; and whist appeal to the higher Chinese tribunals is entirely shut out from them.

All that could be justly expected from my Government under such circumstances was, to provide means for the fair trial of British offenders against Chinese life or property, by British laws and British officers.

With respect to the merits of this particular case, I urged, that no European had seen the body of the man said to be stabbed; that the Lascar denied the whole allegation; and that it was certain no knife had been found upon him.

I concluded, by insisting that the men must be delivered to me by 10 o'clock, or that I must quit Canton, leaving upon his Excellency and themselves, in the form of a protest, all the grave responsibility of any evil consequences which might ensue from their further detention.

I suggested at the same time, that as soon as it were known I had left the factories, it was too probable some 800 or 1,000 men might come up to Canton from Whampoa, to carry a petition to the city gates for the restoration of the people. Whilst I remained, my countrymen would be patient, feeling assured that the safety of the people was certain: it was not easy to believe they would remain so after I had left Canton.

The Lascars, it was to be observed, were a very excitable race of people; and they might urge their commanders to take some hazardous step, which no man would deplore more sincerely than myself: but it would be wholly out of my power to controul events, if they constrained me, by their unreasonable refusal of my proposal, to retire from the stage of my public duties, the very first of which was the protection of my countrymen.

Howqua was evidently greatly shaken by this tone of representation; but still anxiously entreated me to wait till he could see the Governor in the morning. I felt, however, that this was one of those cases, in which firm countenance and rigid adherence to my original declaration was all I had to depend upon; and I closed the discussion by desiring the people to prepare my boat.

At this point Howqua gave way and the men were forthwith restored to me.

They have been in my custody ever since; and your Lordship may be assured that I will never give them up to any other form of trial than that to which I have pledged myself namely, a trial according to the forms of British law.

It is satisfactory to add that the Chinese is said to be doing well; and that the tranquil course of the trade has not yet been interrupted.

I would in this place, my Lord, express a respectful but earnest hope, that no time may be lost in the formation of adequate judicial and police institutions for the government of the King's subjects in this Empire; and I have no hesitation in assuring your Lordship that it is in my power to secure from the provincial authorities the most formal sanction to their operation.

For several months in the year, there are not less than two thousand of His Majesty's subjects at Canton, Whampoa, Macao, and the immediately adjacent anchorages; and your Lordship is aware that, except in cases of homicide, the Chinese Government do not interpose at all for the preservation of peace between them and their own people, or between His Majesty's subjects themselves.

Your Lordship will conceive the exceeding risk and unsuitableness of the absence of defined means of sufficient controul.

I have the honor to be, &c.,
(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT,
Chief superintendent.
Macao, October 3, 1837.

P. S.—Particular circumstances calling me to this place on the 30th ultimo, I apprised the Provincial Government that I adhered to my pledge with respect to these people, but must take them away with me to Macao. The day after my departure from Canton, accompanied by the Lascars, a chop was issued by the district magistrate, desiring that they might be finally delivered to me to be dealt with as I saw fit.

Europe News.

From the English-man Extraordinary, London 14th June.

In the House of Commons the Waterford election committee having reported that Mr. Barron was duly elected, the adjourned debate was resumed on Sir T. D. Acland's amendment upon the motion for going into Committee to consider Lord John Russel's Irish Tithe Resolutions.—As usual on the second night of an Adjourned Debate, the House was at first but thinly attended and little interest was excited. Mr. Litton, Mr. Lascelles, Mr. Relington, Mr. Towsley, and Mr J. Young having spoken, Mr. Benett declared that he could not consent to rescind the appropriation resolutions of 1835, although he then voted against them, because he considered them erroneous in principle, and only brought forward for party purposes.—Lord Sandon followed, and was succeeded by Mr. H. G. Ward, Lord Teignmouth, Mr. Bellew, Mr. F. Shaw, Mr. O'Connell, and Sir R. Peel.—Mr. Spring Rice closed the debate.—The gallery was then cleared for a division, when the numbers were: for Lord John Russell's motion, 317; for Sir Thomas D. Acland's Amendment, 298; majority, 19.—The announcement of the numbers was received with triumphant cheering, which was continued for a considerable time. * * * *

Negro apprenticeship.—Sir George Grey then, in a speech of considerable length, moved the resolutions of which notice had been given in his name, with reference to the decision of the House on Tuesday week upon the subject of negro apprenticeship. It will be remembered that the point of the Honourable Baronet's resolutions consisted in a declaration that it was not expedient to found any measure on the decision come to upon the 22d of this month.—Sir Eardly Wilmot proposed, as an amendment, that it was expedient to carry into effect the resolution moved by him on the occasion alluded to, and carried by a majority of three in a comparatively thin house. The Hon. Baronet, however, still declined to originate the measure of which he thus formally declared the expediency. After a protracted debate, there then appeared—for Sir George Grey's resolutions, 259; for Sir E. Wilmot's amendment 178; majority against giving effect to the resolution of Tuesday night last, 72.

The Bishop of London intimated that he would on an early day, call attention to the countenance given by the Indian Government to idolatrous services of the Hindoos, unless her Majesty's Ministers should then be able to state that some measures were in progres on the subject. Lord Melbourne assured the Right-Rev. Prelate that the serious attention of her Majesty's Ministers was directed to the matter. * * * * * *

The House then went into Committee on the Irish Municipal Corporation Bill, when Sir Robert Peel moved that the electoral qualification be a rental of £10 per annum. Lord John Russell objected to this, and proposed that the qualification be a rental of £5. Sir Robert Peel's motion was lost by a majority of 26.

The Queen, whose small and delicate feet are generally admired, appeared at the birth-day drawing-room in so very small a pair of satin slippers, beautifully embroidered, that it is considered they could not possibly have been worn by any other lady present.

A rumour of the King of Hanover's journey to Berlin, being connected with the marriage of Prince George is confirmed by a letter from Hanover quoted in the Augsburg Gazette.

FATAL RIOT NEAR CANTERBURY.

Intelligence was received in town on Thursday night, the 31st ultimo, of a most sanguinary and insane riot, which took place on the same day, in the neighbourhood of Canterbury, and which had its origin in the wild freaks of a madman, who styled himself Sir William Courtenay. Various accounts of this lamentable occurrence have reached us, of which the following seems to be the most accurate. In 1833, an eccentric individual paid a visit to Canterbury, and took up his abode for some time at the Rose Inn. Great interest was excited, and most persons were desirous of ascertaining who this eccentric character might be. At length an election for member for the city took place, on which occasion the gentleman in question offered himself as a candidate, with extraordinary success, in the name of Sir W. H. H. Courtenay. Such were his persuasive powers, that persons of all ranks felt an interest in his society; some, however, considered him insane, while others were of a contrary opinion. Eventually Sir William, through advocating the cause of a party of smugglers on the Kentish coast, was indicted for perjury, and was tried at Maidstone, before Mr. Justice Park, on Thursday, the 25th of July, 1833. The sentence of the Court was imprisonment and transportation, but Sir William being proved to be insane, his sentence was commuted to confinement in the lunatic asylum at Barming-heath. After about four years' confinement, he was released, on security being given for his future good behaviour. His abode then was at the residence of Mr. Francis of Fairbrook, in the neighbourhood of Boughton, near Canterbury. Some recent misunderstanding between Sir William and Mr Francis's family occasioned him to remove to a cottage adjoining occupied by one Wills. Subsequently he was received at a farm house, called Bossenden-farm, occupied by a person named Culver. From this house appears to have commenced the horrid affair we are about to narrate—an affair from which it could not be anticipated there would result such a melancholy loss of life. We now proceed to give our readers an account of the proceedings from Monday morning, the day on which several unfortunate men went in public in company with and at the command of Sir William. On Monday they sallied forth from the village of Boughton, where they bought bread, and proceeded to Will's house, near Fairbrook. A loaf was broken asunder and placed on a pole, with a flag of white and blue, with a rampant lion. Thence they proceeded to Goodnestone, near Faversham, producing throughout the whole neighbourhood the greatest excitement, and adding to their numbers by the harangues occasionally delivered by this ill-fated madman. At this farm Courtenay stated that "he would strike the bloody blow." A match was then taken from a bean-stack, which had been introduced by one of the party. They next proceeded to a farm at Herne-hill, where Courtenay requested the inmates to feed his friends, which request was immediately complied with. Their next visit was at Dargate-common, where Sir William, taking off his shoes, said, "I now stand on my own bottom." By Sir William's request, his party went to prayers, and then proceeded to Bossenden farm, where they supped, and slept in the barn that night (Monday). At three o'clock on Tuesday morning they left, and proceeded to Sittingbourne to breakfast, where Sir William paid 25s.; they then visited Newnham, where a similar treat was given at the George. After visiting Eastling, Throwley, Seldwich, Lees and Selling, and occasionally addressing the populace, holding out to them such inducements as are usually made by persons desirous of creating a disturbance, they halted in a chalkpit to rest, and on Wednesday evening arrived at Culver's farm, called Bossenden, close to the scene of action. Mr. Curling having had some of his men enticed from their work, applied for a warrant for their apprehension. Mears, a constable, in company with his brother, proceeded to the house of Culver, when, on application being made for the men alluded to, Sir William immediately shot the young man who accompanied his brother in the execution of his duty. Such was the excitement, and the desperate menaces of Sir William and his party, that it became necessary for the magistrates to interfere to put a stop to the proceedings by the capture of the ringleader of the party, from whose advice to his followers the most serious consequences were likely to ensue. At twelve o'clock they assembled at a place called the Osier-bed, where every means were resorted to, to quell the disturbance, but without success. Sir William defied interruption to his men, and fired on the Rev. Mr. Handley, of Herne-hill, who with his brother was assisting to take him into custody. They then made their way to Bossenden-wood, where they lay in ambush, but, as no means appeared to present themselves by which the ringleader could with safety be secured, he being evidently mad, and in the possession of loaded fire-arms, threatening to shoot the first man who interfered with him, it became necessary to apply for the assistance of the 45th regiment, stationed at Canterbury barracks. On the arrival of a detachment of this regiment, they proceeded to the wood, where the party were waiting their arrival.

Sir William, on perceiving his opponents, advanced with the greatest sang-froid, and deliberately shot Lieut. Bennet, of the 45th regiment. This occasioned a return from the man covering his officer, who immediately advanced and shot Sir William, who fell, and died instantly. The excitement at that period, occasioned by each party losing their commander, caused a desperate attack, which terminated in the death of ten persons, besides the brother of the constable shot in the morning, and several others seriously wounded, of some of whom little hopes are entertained of their recovery. The weapons in the hands of the followers of Sir William were chiefly, if not altogether, heavy bludgeons. The following are the names of the killed:—Sir William Percy Honywood Courtenay, Knight of Malta, &c., supposed to be John Nicholls Tom, late of Truro, in Cornwall; Lieut. Bennet, 45th; Edward Wright, Herne-hill; F. Harvey, Herne-hill; E. Brenchett, Dunkirk; W. Burford, Boughton; W. Foster, Herne-hill; Thomas Griggs, W. Wry, Herne-hill; George Catt, constable of Faversham, killed in the execution of his duty. Lieutenant Prendergast, wounded in the head. Accounts of a later date mention that two more of the rioters have died of their wounds.

Sir Jasper Nicholls is reported as likely to succeed Sir Peregrine Maitland in his command in India. Sir Lionel Smith, it is also said, will resign his government of Jamaica, so soon as a successor is appointed.

THE CORONATION.—It is understood that numerous entertainments will be given by the nobility and gentry after the Coronation, and it is expected that the season will be unusually gay and brilliant. We understand the Coronation procession will be of unexampled splendor, and will proceed from Buckingham Palace, up Constitution-hill, through Piccadilly, St. James's streets, and Pall-mall, to Westminster Abbey. There will also be a fair for two days held in Hyde Park, and fire works and other amusements will be afforded to the population of London.

"Notice is hereby given, it is the particular desire of the Queen that all Ladies attending her Majesty's Drawing Rooms should appear in dresses of British manufacture."

There is every probability of obtaining a brood from the giraffes at the Zoological Gardens in the Regent's-park, a fact very important and interesting to the naturalists.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30th.—Lord Brougham, on his recent tour at Brussels, was received with great honour and respect. After being closetted with the king, he went to the Chamber of Representatives, accompanied by Sir R. Adair, and on being recognised in the Ambassador's tribune, all the members rose simultaneously and bowed, as a compliment to a man whose great talents and mental power has rendered him celebrated over Europe.

THE GREAT WESTERN.—The Great Western sailed on the 2d instant from Bristol. She had on board sixty-five passengers, besides a general assortment of cargo; she has taken with her 40,750 sovereigns; she is in much better sailing trim than on her last starting, and the general impression is, that she will be at New York on the 18th instant.

United States.

A most awful fire broke out at Charleston, on the night of the 27th April, consuming whole streets, and occasioning a loss of property to the amount of 3,000,000 dollars. The New York Daily Express says—"Thirteen hundred buildings are destroyed, with their contents, supposed to be worth 5,000,000 dollars! The flames were visible for twenty miles. The noble hotel, called the Charleston, worth, with its furniture, 200,000 dollars, is a heap of smoking ruins. The Masonic-hall, a Methodist Episcopal, and a Methodist Protestant church, Catholic chapel, and Hebrew Synagogue, are destroyed, with many of the most handsome houses in the city. Col. C. J. Stedman, Mr. F. Schnierle, Mr. Pieut, and Capt. Duff, of the ship Herald, have lost their lives. Many are dreadfully injured by the falling of ruins, and their lives despaired of. Nearly 1,500 families are entirely without a home, and many even without shelter. The distress and suffering are inconceivable. About 2,000,000 dollars are said to be insured partly in New York."

CANTON PRESS.
Saturday, 29th Sept.

By the Sir Herbert Compton from Bombay, 20th August, the London overland mail of 16 June and Galignani's Messengers of 18th have been received. We have given from the London Englishman Extraordinary of the 15th some extracts. There are few news of political importance, in default of which the approaching pageant of the Queen's coronation was the great event of the day, and Ambassadors from almost all the European Courts were thronging to London to compliment the Queen. Commerce, on the whole, was improving, though Teas were rather lower than before. We notice the arrival in England of the following vessels from China: George IV, Ann, Rajahstan, Aberc. Robinson, Isabella. Edinburgh, General Kyd, Argyle, Lady Nugent, Sophia, Morley, Lady McNaghten, Tigris, Isabel.

Per Mermaid Calcutta papers to 14th August have been received which mention the loss of the Raj Ranee on the Eastern Reef, when leaving the river bound for England, and of the Sir Herbert Taylor from Singapore with a cargo of Betelnut, on the middle Point, nearly opposite Kedgeree. Our shipping report of this day, we are sorry to say, shews a rather long list of disasters and casualties. The loss of the Claremont from Bombay, on the Ladrones, will again be heavily felt by our Insurance Offices, her cargo consisting, we hear, of 2500 bales of Cotton, and about 300 chests of Opium. There has been very bad weather in the China sea on the 24th and 25th, the gale commencing from the East, and blowing afterwards with increased violence from the South. The weather on land also was very bad, and a great many native boats on the river have been upset and many lives lost.

P. S. Sir Herbert Compton we have received a Singapore Free Press of 13th September. The Sylph from China, in 22 days, arrived in Singapore on the 14th.

Another Edict from the authorities respecting the Kinqua debts has appeared, and as far as, from a very superficial interpretation of its contents, we could gather, the arrangement alluded to in our last, as entered into by the Parsee creditors, is approved of, as to the payment in ten annual instalments of the debt, and two years more for the payment of the interest, but no mention is made of the Co-hong's liability to the payment of 8125,000 per annum, as far at least as we understood our interpreter, but we hope in our next to be able to lay a complete translation of the document before our readers.

We have, as will be seen from our extracts, devoted considerable space to Capt. Elliot's correspondence with his government, a correspondence which, by order of government, has been published, and which was to have the effect, no doubt, on the M. P. s. perfectly to understand the very intricate question of relations between the English and Chinese nations. We have, from these papers, not recopied those addressed to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs by Sir G. B. Robinson, they are Nos. 1 to 6, but are extremely unimportant, and as insipid as the quarter whence they come. We begin our copies with the present Chief Superintendent's letters and much as we hoped to have seen something in them to meet our approbation, we found but assumption unsuppported, and presumption strong, trusting in the absence of knowledge at home with regard to Chinese affairs,

The object for which these papers have been published is to establish a Court of Judicature, or in the words of this publication itself "For the purpose of enabling the British Superintendents of trade to exercise a control over the proceedings of British subjects with each other, and with the Chinese."

We certainly do admit that it would be desirable to have some jurisdiction here to restrain British subjects in case of any violation of the law, and we are by no means averse to the establishment of a Court of Justice. The singular supineness of the Chinese government, in the very few cases that have been brought to its notice, where foreigners were concerned, inclines us to the belief that they would have no objection whatever to leave the jurisdiction over the foreigners to their own tribunals. But we are at loss to know whence Capt. Elliot can have drawn the information he gives to his government, that "he feels no hesitation in assuring his Lorpship that it is in his power to secure from the provincial authorities the most formal sanction to their (judicial and police institutions) operation."

We ourselves do not doubt that, if a person, competent in the law of the realm, (let the Superintendents be ever so amiable and accomplished, it can hardly be expected that a Captain of the Royal Navy knows much about Commercial affairs) were to be sent out, his presence here might be of some use; he would be appealed to, he would be the judge in differences arising among his countrymen, and, we suppose, that Parliament might render his decrees to be respected in other courts of either British India or Great Britain. This would certainly be some advantage, though not of so much as may appear at first sight, the commercial community of Canton being composed of foreigners of a great many different nations, individuals of which would, if their cause be bad, not like to subject it to a British Court. As to the Court of criminal judicature, we do not see how that can be effective without a strong constabulary force, and how it can possibly raise that here, it will do better to consider seriously before it establishes itself. In fact we should think that from the great scarcity of crime hitherto in China among foreigners, it is of little consequence whether such a court exist at all, and we doubt still more the propriety of its being established, and its entering on its duties, as it would supply the Chinese with the pretext of considering that court answerable for whatever irregularities might have been commited by their countrymen.

However, this is different from Capt. Elliot's singular statement that it is "in his power to secure "from the provincial authorities the most formal sanction to their operation." We might quote here the Emperor's edict in favor, if so it may be called, of a Magistrate coming to Canton, when, in consequence of Capt. Elliot's application in January last year, the Viceroy reported to the Emperor, and the Emperor's answer was then received to the following effect, viz; "When he (the British Magistrate) "in future either lives at Macao or at Canton he "ought to conform to the old laws. He is not "permitted to exceed the proper time by loitering "about and thus to give gradually rise to irregularities. If the said foreigner performs his duty "improperly, acts irregularly, and combines with "traitorous natives to disobey clandestinely the "laws, he shall be driven back to his country in "order to do away with the source of evil."

This, we opine, or expressions akin to the foregoing, will be the utmost sanction that, under existing circumstances any British officer will ever obtain from the Chinese Government, any impression to the contrary Captain Elliot may have conceived, notwithstanding, nor is it easy to understand upon what premises the assurances this officer holds out to the authorities at home have been built, when every previous experience went to shew only that a British authority might probably be suffered, but certainly not sanctioned, and when, had he been gifted with prophecy, but this was not to be expected, the immediate future would have proved to him how far indeed the Chinese authorities were from sanctioning, in his own person, the reception of a magistrate from England, it being well known that the Chief Superintendent, unsuccessful in his endeavour to have any communication with the government, was obliged to retire again to Macao, whence he has hardly stirred during the last 10 months. We might remark upon other parts of these papers laid before parliament, but our space runs short, and we fear it is of little use now to write against measures which have by this time already been carried into effect, for it is not likely that, the act of Parliament once obtained, Ministers would allow their patronage to cool in the appointment of some one of their friends to the new judgeship at Canton.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—The demand for LONGCLOTHS is very languid, the dealers hands being quite full. COTTON YARN—we have heard of no further sale than the one reported last week of 1200 Peculs, good water twist Nos 16 @ 50 at 32 @ 33 $. The cheap price has caused some little enquiry for export to the Straits and Bombay. CHINTZES, the stock is rather heavy, and very low prices are offered for some suitable patterns and dimensions.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES have rather declined, but we hear of no sales. LONGELLS are rather firmer-resales however of about 2000 pieces have been made during the week at not better than 8¼ to raise money, about 400 Pieces of inferior fetched only $ 7½.

METALS.—No alteration in price or demand.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER remains the same. BETELNUT is dull.

RICE,—the abundant supply of rain has reduced it to the former quotations.

COTTON.—There is very little alteration to notice. Prices continue nearly the same for the Bombay staple, but with rather more demand, and with perhaps a little advance on the better qualities. In Bengal nothing has been doing, indeed, the late arrivals not having yet discharged, there is little or none in first hands. The stock of Madras is also very short, but the former purchases cannot, we understand, be realized, except at a loss.

OPIUM.—There has been very little doing during the week, the brokers generally being afraid to appear. Prices therefore are nearly nominal, but there appears some little inclination to speculate in the Bengal drug, the supply on hand being moderate. The holders of Malwa appear rather desirous to realize. The deliveries to the 22nd were, Patna, old 23, new 365, Benares, old —, new 4; Malwa 101; Total 499 Chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—About 2,000 bales are reported to be down, and the holders do not relax in their demands of $ 600 and upwards, so that nothing has been done in it.

TEA.—Though some of the new black teas have arrived, no prices have yet been settled, except for some Orange Pekoe and Caper.

VOL. 4. No. 5. Canton, Saturday, 6th October, 1838. No. 161.

Cochinchina.

From a Correspondent.

It is well known that the present government has a well appointed navy, the largest and best armed in Eastern Asia. This year some petty acts of piracy had been committed on the coast, which so much incensed the King, that a large part of the fleet was immediately put under sailing orders; and, cruizing about the Paracels and other places, fell in with several craft from Haenan. There being some guns on board, these fishermen and traders were declared pirates, and brought in triunph to the harbour of Phuyen. In the mean while, an Amoy junk coming up from Singapore, happened to fall in with one of these cruizers, and was ordered to heave to. Upon refusing to comply with this request, the suspicion that this was a regular buccaneer increased, and she was finally boarded by force The sailors, having been transported to the next military station, were put in prison, and the property was confiscated The commander, however, was a very spirited man and drew up a suitable petition to the local authorities, wherein he explained the legality of his pursuits and also sent in the register of the junk with a permit to trade to the Southern seas. This document contains an order of Keën-lung addressed to all the prefects of the maritime provinces, to allow Chinese junks to sail to the Indian Archipelago, and puts the lawfulness of this trade beyond doubt. After a few weeks of delay, the magistrates finally set them free, but made them pay a heavy fine for not lowering immediately the sails, when the man of war ordered them to do so. They then reembarked their cargo, met with a very severe gale, lost their mast, and, being without water, abandoned the vessel and arrived entirely destitute at Keamoon.

It would appear that the Kingdom of Cochinchina exhibits despotism in its worst forms. The only rich man is the King, he has fine palaces, large treasures, excellent fortresses and vessels far superior to the navy of the Celestial Empire. The officers little share in this splendoor, but are the mere puppets of one man. The nation at large is in the most squalid condition, poor, wretched, and filthy in the extreme, and forced to give one third of its labour, or an equivalent, to the King. Few have more than a bare subsistence, and even if superior industry would enable them to amass a little property, the Mandarins would soon take possession of their trifling hoards. Yet this country confesses to be under the transforming influence of the Celestial Empire, and to be embued with the true principles of civilisation. Confucius is there as much conned as in the Celestial Empire, and notwithstanding the many radical notions of the sage, the many of the people labour under grinding tyranny. It is really extraordinary, that a monarch who, by sending down his ships to the Straits and even to Calcutta, and thereby giving a practical proof that he is fond of commercial intercourse, still proves hostile to ships which visit his ports. Though fear is at the bottom of all this, yet, if he would only take the trouble to survey the state of the world, for which he has the most ample means in his well stored library, he would find little reason to fear an attack upon his paltry dominions. It is as if all the nations which use the Chinese character had combined to exclude all the remaining part of the world from friendly intercourse, and whilst living like spiders, to abhor the contaminating influence of foreigners. Though China professes still the more enlarged views, especially when compared with Annam, (Cochinchina) Japan, and Korea, yet it shews its inconsistency that, whilst admiting the merchant, it forbids all exchange of thought between the flowery native and the outside barbarian. The Court of Hue, however, acts more considerately, and, whilst carefully keeping its subjects from all contact with the far travelled adventurers, it has scrupulously collected all possible knowledge of the west in the records of the palace. Thus we may find the works of Buffon with the latest treatise upon tactics, the best geographical works with maps and charts, while a steam boat is anchored at the water port of the royal abode. Taoukwang might as well follow the example of his southern brother and give at the same time his subjects the advantage of obtaining a more liberal idea of things in general.

Maulmain.

MAJOR BENSON.

Private Letters from Moulmein are contradictory on the probable reception Major Benson will meet with, but the expectations of a peaceful issue to the controversy predominate. Tharawaddie has not yet surmounted the ill-will engendered amongst his people by the wanton execution of the heir apparent, and he dreads to brave us at such a juncture. With what shadow of security can we however place reliance on a submission so gained? and what a plea do we not give him for repudiating it at a more convenient season, by sending over so peculiar a present as the white Elephant, lately embarked from these shores, which the craftiness of the usurper will, no doubt, construe, when occasion requires, into a propitiatory offering to acquire again favour in his eyes? It ill assorts with the position and character of the British Indian Government to pursue a policy so hesitating and unduly conciliatory as we have of late shewn towards the usurper Court of Ava.—Spectator, July 28.

Spain.

We observe in a Cadiz paper "El Tiempo" of 3d May that in the Province of Cordova a new mine of Quicksilver has been discovered. The following is an abstract from the repoart made to the authorities by an exdepnty to the Cortes, Don Pedro Alcala Zamora.

The site of the discovery is near the upper falls of the river Guadajoz (the famous Salzum of the Romans), between the Caicena and the Salobral, where it runs paralell to unite with the Lucobin, between the villages of Castil de Campos and Fuente Tojar. Some women in collecting some white earth, generally used for the cleaning of their cooking utensils, observed in it something shining, which shewing to others, who took it to be silver, began to dig in the spot where this earth had been found. The soon found little globules of the size of snipeshot, which they found to be Quicksilver, and immediately gave up all further seatch, deeming the discovery of no value. Mr. Zamora, hearing of this circumstance, got two of the men who had been present before, to accompany him to the spot with their spades. This he found by the rains to be deprived of its covering of vegetable soil, and to preseut to the view a whitish earth. He directed the men to dig on in the hole already begun before, when he soon found imbedded in this earth some darker spots of a few inches in iize, of a sandy calcareous earth, in which he found a great number of small globules of Quicksilver; these he collected, and sent as a sample, such as he found it, to the Deputation of the province of Cordova. It was expected that this discovery would lead to an important result.

We also find in another number of this paper an important Decree of the Spanish Government, which authorizes it to contract for a new loan of 500 millions reales de vellon, about 4 millions sterling, which was to be exclusively applied to the expenditure since the 1st of April of this year, and to the maintenance of the army—no part of it was to be applied to the liquidation of former debts. The produce of Quicksilver and lead of the mines of Almaden and Linares is to be set aside for the payment of the interest and capital of this loan.

The Government is at same time authorized to fund the dividends due on foreign loans.

From the Canton Register, 2d October.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON REGISTER.

Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in sending the particulars of our saving the crew of a Junk at sea, on board the "Sir Herbert Compton."

At noon 22nd September in Lat. 16, N. 115 E., observed a wreck to windward about 7 miles, made a tack, and stood towards it, when she proved a Chinese Junk, masts and rudder gone; passed close to her, and hove to, sent our boat on board, when they made the most urgent supplications to be admitted to come on board; from what I could understand she must have been in this state for three weeks. Took the whole of them, 56 in number; and, as the cargo was apparently of little value, abandoned her; and I have much gratification in having saved the lives of so many men from a certain death, as it came on to blow a severe gale that night, and they must all have been washed off her deck; I believe, from what I could get from them, they were bound from Hainan to Namoa.

I remain, Dear Sir,
Your's faithfully.

F. S BOULTON,
Commanding Sir H. Compton.

Canton, 19th Sept. 1838.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON REGISTER.

Dear Sir,—I arrived here this morning, and finding several reports in circulation respecting the loss of the "Barque Claremont," I beg to forward you the enclosed for your perusal, and will feel obliged by your stating the case in your paper. You will also confer a great favour on myself, officers, and crew by returning in your paper our very grateful acknowledgements to captain Arckoll, of the ship "La Belle Alliance," for his very great kindness to us during the time we were on board, for which we feel very grateful, I remain &c.

WM. HAWES,
Commander late Barque Claremont.

Markwick's Hotel, September 30th, 1838.

N. B—All the crew and passengers saved—please return the enclosed.

We, the undersigned, make the following declaration, relative to the loss of the Barque "Claremont", to the best of our recollection.

That on the 22nd of September, in Lat. from 19° to 20°. N. and Long. about 114° 50', E. a gale of wind commenced from the Northward; made all snug by housing topgallant masts and flying jibboom, and reducing sail,—8 P. M. under a close reefed maintopsail on the larboard tack; one pump at work during the night; the gale encreasing, having veered to the N. E., and blowing in severe gusts with a heavy cross sea on, both pumps constantly going, the vessel shipping heavy seas; washed away the starboard quarter boat and several water casks from the deck.

September 23rd A. M. Wore ship, washed away the larboard quarter boat. The leak increasing, having five feet water in the hold; deemed it necessary to heave cargo overboard; after heaving fifty or sixty bales of cotton overboard, obliged to close the hatches, in consequence of the heavy seas shipped on board, and the water finding its way below. The gale blowing in violent gusts, and veering to East, blew away all our sails from the gaskets and yards, with exception of the foretopsail; washed away the bulwarks, poop cabins, and many of the spars from the deck. Midnight 8 feet water in the hold.

September 24th A. M. Wore ship, the wind hauling round to the Southward and moderating; a heavy sea ruming, and seas washing over the vessel; found she had settled considerably. Got out the long boat and veered her astern with provisions. After using every endeavour to save the vessel, finding her fast sinking, we were compelled to abandon her, having got all the crew into the long boat, the vessel in two or three minutes went down. The logbook was washed away with the cabins; the only cargo saved is four bundles of pearls. After being in the boat about four hours, we were picked up by the ship La belle Alliance, Capt. Arckoll. Morrison Education Society.

The annual General Meeting of the Morrison Education Society was held in the Rooms of the General Chamber of Commerce, Canton, on Wednesday, the 3d of October, 1838, at 11 A. M. Present: Messrs Dent, Green, Lindsay, Innes, A. Matheson, Dinshaw Furdoonjee, Moller, J. R. Robertson, Wetmore, Slade, Williams, Fessenden Bridgman, and Morrison.

The Chair was taken by Lancelot Dent, Esq. as President, by whom the nature of the Society's operations during the past year, and of its expectations for the future, were briefly stated.

The Report of the Trustees was then read by Mr. Bridgman, as Corresponding Secretary, and of this we give in the following abstract, the principal heads.

"When in European countries institutions for the education of the young are about to be established, such projects are more apt to engage the attention of the public, which is more able from its own observation to appreciate the advantages thereof; consequently the means are easily procured, and both teachers and pupils are found without difficulty. In China, however, things are different;—not only do the natives, though many thousands of their children have not the means of obtaining education, not seek instruction at the hands of the Society, but it is likewise difficult to obtain the means for teaching from the want of elementary schoolbooks, of teachers, and of a good method of teaching. The necessity there is for good teachers is great, and ought to be remedied by all means; these ought to be natives well acquainted with their own language and institutions as well as with the principles of science. One great object of the Society would be attained if only a few individuals received a good education for the ordinary pursuits of life, but much more desirable would it be if the children educated through the means of this Society were to become teachers in their turn, and thus widen continually the sphere of the Society's influence. To this object the efforts of the Schools for Chinese established hitherto by foreigners, seem not to have been directed, and the cause of their limited success may be ascribed to the difficulty, nay, even impossibility, hitherto of procuring able teachers, a want, though often felt, that has not been remedied.

"The society applied in the first instance to Professors Silliman, Goodrich and Gibbs of Yale College, and these gentlemen had in two instances engaged the services of young men well qualifiede for this purpose, but in one instance the departure of the teacher was prevented by obstacles of a domestic nature, and in the other by the individual being unfortunately afflicted with a disease of the eyes that threatened total blindness, and rendered him unfit for the performance of the duties assigned to him. The professors however were actively seeking for another person to send out without delay. The application in England for a teacher was made to the British and Foreign School Society, and an answer may be expected on the return of Mr. Fox, one of the original trustees of this society.

"The Secretary then stated that the society had received a letter from Lieut. Bolleau regarding the great progress made in India in the education of the natives, for which, a short time ago, no more was done in India than is now done in China.

"Mr. Bridgman then stated that of the 5 boys which were on the society's list at the last anniversary, four continued in their respective courses of study, and one other had been received, as well as applications for the admission of three others which were however necessarily refused from the want of teachers.

"Of the two boys sent to Singapore one continues his studies there, and the most favorable accounts of the progress he is making have been received, which lead the Society to hope that he will become an able teacher in due time. The other has returned to China where he continues his studies of geography, arithmetic, natural history and grammar. He reads English and Chinese with ease, and has short exercises in translating these languages. In his other studies he has also made some progress, and is besides employed as usher to two other boys less advanced than himself, and who are chiefly employed in learning to write and read Chinese and English—they have made same progress in the study of geography and arithmetic. Little has yet been done for the fifth boy who is only seven years old, from the already complained of want of a teacher, which if remedied, would allow of some more boys being immediately put under his care. The sixth on the list is a youth who has been received this year, is studying the rudiments of the English language and of the healing art under the care of Dr. Parker, and is daily employed in the Hospital as an assistant. He has some knowledge of Chinese literature, and has good natural abilities joined to an enquiring disposition, on which account his teacher entertains a very favorable opinion as to his future progress. His attention as well as that of the other boys is daily directed to the truths of natural and revealed religion, and to the ultimate destiny of man.

"Mr. Bridgman then explained the course taken by the Society, where children were placed by them in schools over which they had no controul, which was, that, considering themselves as guardians of the children, they were placed in the school chosen under the entire direction of its officers, giving them at same time the necessary pecuniary means and such counsel as they think conducive to securing the children's continuance in school through their course of study, it being of course the care of the Trustees that the proper schools be selected and the necessary instruction be provided, and that the children may not leave the school before their education be completed.

"After some remarks on the impropriety of tempting parents to send their boys for education, by bribes of money, the secretary went into details of the last year's expenditure of which the principal items are: The maintainance of the pupils, being $ 1½ per month; to the school at Macao, and to the Singapore Institution school $ 15 per month to each.

"Mr. Bridgman then gave an account of the state of the school at Macao, under Mrs. Gutzlaff's management, as stated to the Committee by the revd. Mr. Gutzlaff, from which it appears that it now contains 16 boys and five girls, living in his house and receiving both food and raiment. A great difficulty was experienced in retaining the children at school, particularly the girls, who were generally very soon taken back by their parents. Of the boys fewer withdrawals have taken place this year than heretofore, and the applications for admission of others have been numerous. The secretary stated that the Committee still continued paying $ 15 per month towards the expenses of this school, though it was conducted, chiefly, with regard to the obtaining of pupils, on a principle of which they did not approve unwilling to damp the ardour with which the school was commenced.

"The Secretary then took a brief survey of the state of the Singapore institution school.

"The trustees have not yet been able to procure accurate accounts of the state of education of the Chinese beyond the boundaries of the Empire, full accounts of the proceedings of the schools in Singapore, Malacca, Pinang, Rhio, Bankok, and other places are much needed, in order to know how education is speeding. Some account of the education among the Chinese at Bankok has been received, which represent it to be in a very low condition owing to the want of good teachers, who but rarely emigrate from China; the defective state of education is in part also produced by the low remuneration given to the teacher, and by the indifference evinced to the progress of the children by their parents.

"After some general remarks on the state of education in China Mr. Bridgman concluded the report by stating that the library of the Society had been opened in a convenient apartment, for the accomodation of the books already collected, amounting to about 2900 volumes, and is now easy of access to all. The trustees recommend the early adoption of measures for it's enlargement."

After the reading of the Report, the Chairman having explained that an irregularity had taken place in the appointment by the Trustees, of Mr. Wetmore, as provisional Auditor, in consequence of the absence from Canton of one of the Auditors appointed at the last meeting: it was

On the motion of J. R. Robertson, Esq., seconded by E. Moller, Esq.

Resolved, That the provisional appointment of an Auditor, which has been made by the Trustees, be approved by this meeting.

It was next, on the motion of Dinshaw Furdoonjee, Esq., seconded by S. W. Williams, Esq.

Resolved. That the Report which has been read be approved and accepted.

The President explained, with reference to a motion for the adoption of a new Bye-Law in regard to schools, of which notice had been given at the last General meeting, and to which, as required by the Society's rules, the approval of the Trustees had been accorded, that Mr. King, the original mover, being absent, the motion would be brought forward by Mr. Williams. It was then—

On the motion of S. W. Williams, Esq., seconded by H. H. Lindsay, Esq:

Resolved.—That all Societies or Individuals, applying for the assistance of this Association, shall be expected to exhibit statements of their receipts and expenditure for purposes of education, as well as of their systems of instruction, and to continue the same regularly, so long as the Society's aid shall be afforded also, that any member of the Committee of Trustees, present in any place where such schools may be established, shall be considered a visitor of the schools.

Resolved. That this become a By-Law of the Society.

On the motion of H. H. Lindsay, Esq., seconded by James Innes, Esq., it was

Resolved. That the Trustees be instructed to solicit from the Teachers and Directors of all Schools for the Chinese beyond the boundaries of the empire, and es-

A sum of from $ 5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939.50., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 250—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.50—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There has been very little doing in LONGCLOTHS during the week. Greys may be quoted 3.75 @ 4 and white 4 @ 4½. In consequence of the endless disputes regarding the quality of Longcloths between the importers and mandarins we hear that an attempt is making to fix all greys as No. 3, all whites ½ as No. 1 and ½ as No. 2, which, if assented to, will, on the whole, be a favorable arrangement. There is a little more firmness in COTTON YARN, and we hear of a sale of a small lot of 50 bales Nos. 18 @ 42, being an average of about $ 30 @ 36 the quality good, the lower numbers under 32, watertwist. Several parcels have been purchased for the Straits and India, but we could not learn the particulars. In our last week's report the numbers of the 1200 Peculs sold @ $ 32 @ 33, should have been 16 @ 30, not 16 @ 30.

WOLLENS.—There has been no transaction in SPANISH STRIPES reported to us, but the demand is better. LONGELLS, are also firmer, although 2 or 3000 pieces were sold by the Chinese at low rates lately, there being a settling day among them two or three days since.

METALS.—We hear of no transactions.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, has declined in consequence of the importation of 5 @ 6000 Piculs, and cannot be quoted higher than 7¼ @ 7½. BETELNUT, remains as before $ 3 @ 3½.

RICE.—The weather, it is said, is most favorable for the next crop, and prices therefore remain very low.

SANDALWOOD.—About 4000 Piculs of Company's quality was sold at Macao in the early part of the week at $ 19, which shows some improvement.

COTTON.—The market generally remains the same as to prices, but there has been more enquiry for Bombay Cotton, and 4 @ 5000 bales middling to fair quality have been disposed of during the week. The finer descriptions, from the short quantity here, inclined to advance a little, the common kinds without alteration. No transactions have taken place in Bengal or Madras Cotton, the cheapness directing attention more to the Bombay staple. Accounts may now be shortly expected of the produce of the Nankin crop, which will have considerable influence on the market.

OPIUM.—Few or no brokers have made their appearance during the week, and nothing has been doing. Malwa keeps low, 560 @ 570,—the Chinese selling off their time barquing. Patna is nominal 580 @ 590, being in few hands, but no buyers, the deliveries both outside and at Whampoa being for the present stopped. For those of last month see above.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Nothing yet doing in Nankin Silk, the holders still demanding such exorbitant prices. We do not hear of any further supplies being down.

TEA.—We hear of no transaction in the tea-market, except the purchase of a few chops of Caper at rather lower prices.

VALENTYN'S REMARKS ON THE DUTCH TRADE TO JAPAN.

From a Correspondent.

There has been so much written about Japan, that any additional remarks might appear superfluous. Yet, of the early proceedings of the Dutch little is known, and extracts from the compilation of Valentyn's folio may throw some light upon the adventures of this enterprizing nation.

Forced to seek new channels of commerce, some merchants of Rotterdam sent, in 1600, an expedition round Cape Horn, both for discovery as well as for trading. Of these ships only one was saved and cast with 17 sailors in a shattered condition on the Coast of Japan. On their arrival, the Portuguese laboured very hard to inspire the Emperor with suspicion against these heretics, but the monarch refused to listen to their insinuations, and sent some of the shipwrecked sailors, after the lapse of four years, in a junk to Patany, on the East Coast of the Malay Peninsula. Amongst them was a man of the name of Santvoord, who particularly pleased the Emperor. He revisited Japan a few years afterwards, and was requested by the Sovereign to pilot some ships under the Dutch flag to the shores of his Empire. Two of them arrived, accordingly, in 1609 at Firando, were received with great honors, and the commander permitted to go as envoy to Yeddo, where he concluded a commercial treaty. Speex, a senior merchant of the Company, remained behind and exchanged the skins which the ships had brought for copper and iron. But the trade yielded no profits, and though a factory had been established at Firando, an island on the South West Coast, the directors at home judged it more prudent to give up the whole commerce (1616). The execution of this order was however delayed by the council at Batavia, which looked for better times. In this expectation they were not disappointed; their trade increased every year; they were able to sell Chinese silks and India produce with great profit, and the exports of gold proved very advantageous. As early as 1621, however, the trade was put under certain restrictions, and the natives prohibited from leaving the country in their ships. A reformed minister reached about this time the country, but it does not appear that the performed his functions.

The Portuguese, in no way daunted by ill success, did every thing in their power to blacken the character of the Dutch as pirates. Every one of their actions was misrepresented, for which the Dutch on their part took ample revenge. As they furnished the country with every foreign article wanted, the Emperor thought that he might dispense with the Roman Catholics who had become too powerful, and favor the Dutch to any extent.

The prohibitions against the Portuguese proceeded from little things to more important ones. At first, native servants were prevented from carrying large umbrellas after their masters, like the flowery natives from putting on their shoulders sedanchairs in which barbarians are seated. When entering the house of an official perschage, they had to put off their shoes; nobody was permitted to carry a sword, or beads, etc. Even their gifts to the poor were regulated by law, and their intercourse with native servants proscribed.

Though the Dutch by no means participated in the odium thrown upon the Portuguese, yet they had to bear the consequences. A summary order was delivered to them to this purport: "If you wish to carry on the trade with us, you ought to obey implicitly our orders, and you can no longer be under the control of your employers." To this the chief of the factory agreed, and from that moment their situation became intolerable. The envoys, who had hitherto frequently been sent to the capital, and there treated with great honors, were now annoyed in every possible way. They had often to wait four hours in the ante-room, with their heads bent to the earth, before the Emperor made his appearance, and when he did arrive, he ordered them to act the buffoon in order to render themselves ridiculous before the whole court. Heavy exactions and restrictions upon the trade, a swarm of linguists, police runners, compradors, hong merchants, etc., let loose to prey upon the very vitals of the commerce, were the happy consequences of their promising to obey the laws of the country. When they finally, with wonderful patience, had conformed to the regulations in every way, they made sure of the great favor they would obtain with the Government. They were very soon disappointed. A vessel arrived in a very leaky state, and these docile foreigners supplicated government to permit the repair in order to make her seaworthy. In reply to their application they were told, that this was against the law, and could not be allowed; they ought to obey the existing regulations and not to make innovations. It was then their wish to retain the ship, but this was also against the laws of the country, and the vessel was obliged to leave on the day appointed by His Imperial Majesty, and foundered at sea. From this the reader may learn, that the Great Emperor at Yeddo can shew as much compassion towards distant foreigners as his compeer at Peking; in fact, both have never changed their tenderness towards barbarians. In many instances did the government exercise jurisdiction over Dutch subjects; one of their chiefs, for instance, who had behaved tyrannically towards the Japanese at Formosa, was kept five years in prison, and a butler, who had been found with a married woman, was beheaded.

As soon as government had determined upon the explusion of the Portuguese, Dutch gunners and engineers were ordered to come to the Capital, and instruct the natives in the manufacture and use of fire arms. An embassy arrived just at that time, and several military gentlemen were purposely sent, in order to amuse the Emperor with fire works and the throwing of bombs. Yet, notwithstanding their instructions, the people could never make any great progress, and their guns as well as match-locks were of the most clumsy description.

The Emperor, having in 1636 fortified himself in his palace, gave orders that about 83 poor people, most of them blind or cripples, should be led out of the capital into the open field, and whilst surrounded by a strong watch, starved to death, because they were Christians. The signal for the extirpation of the Christians was now given, and the Provinces were ready to imitate the great Emperor. To facilitate the undertaking, the principal Portuguese with their descendants were sent away, and permitted to take with them no less than 6 millions of guilders. Thus the sinew of their strength was cut, and the Emperor no longer hesitated to employ force. The inhabitants of Arima had, in the mean while, risen in open rebellion against their superiors, who had oppressed them in the most cruel manner. In vain did the Japanese army try to take their castles, they held out to the last, and in several sallies routed the imperial troops. The aid of the accommodating Dutch was therefore called in; they sent thither a ship which, after planting some batteries on shore, and bombarding the fortress of the insurgents both with the guns of the ship as well as from shore, forced them to surrender to their relentless enemies. These cut them all to pieces and executed the ring-leaders with fiendish cruelty. The Hollanders received at the same time order to expel the Portuguese and Spaniards from Manila, Macao and Formosa, in order to free the Empire from the presence of these hated enemies, and prevent any priests from getting access to the country. The council at Yeddo also decreed, that Nagasaki with the environs should be levelled to the ground, because the inhabitants had held traiterous intercourse with these detestable foreigners. This order was, however, not executed, and the Emperor was content with having expelled the Portuguese from that place.

Thus freed from the apprehension of being involved in a destructive war with the Spaniards, the Government resolved to humble the Dutch, its faithful allies. At that time Caron, a man of extensive knowledge and a deep politician, was chief of the factory at Firando. It unfortunately happened that an embassy arrived from Macao (1640), and that the Roman Catholics composing it, to the number of 61 men, were publicly beheaded, for having come to the country in defiance of the established laws. As such a deed of cruelty could be perpetrated with impunity, it was the opinion of the Japanese government, that the Hollanders might be put under the most severe restrictions without rousing them to resistance. The experiment was immediately made. They were denounced as Christians, the celebration of the Sunday and of any other festival prohibited, the reading of Christian books of whatsoever description interdicted, and the few members composing the factory, during their stay in Firando, obliged to live without God and religion. Having also acceded to this proposition, and, for the sake of filthy lucre, renounced the gospel so long as they remained in the territory of the despot, new requisitions were made. First, the descendants of the Dutch begotten by Japanese mothers were transported to Batavia; next their dwellings, which had the date of their being built in such and such a year of A. D. in front, were levelled to the ground; and, finally, the splendid factory of the Company pulled down, because it was erected with too much show, against the explicit prohibition of the local authorities. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the factors still hoped to ward off the blow by a rich present sent to the Court. This was scarcely arrived, when the Emperor issued an order to confine the Hollanders to Desima, an island raised on purpose close to Nagasaki, to which the Portugese had been banished before their final expulsion. The trade was then reduced to the same languishing state under which it labours to this very day, but the execution of the laws against foreign intercourse was far more severe, and the continual arrogance almost insufferable. But the Dutch were not the only nation which suffered by this change; the Chinese likewise were exposed to very great indignities, and the reasons for their bad treatment often most trifling; for instance, a Dutch coin had been found on board of one of the Junks, and the whole cargo had nearly been confiscated, because the sailors were accused of holding traiterous intercourse. When the Mantchoos conquered the country, the Japanese refused to enter into commercial transactions, because they had allowed themselves to be subjugated by barbarians. Repeated embassies from Fuhchoo proved of no avail, until the Japanese themselves, of their own accord, compromised the matter. The Siamese were equally defeated in their attempt to reestablish their commercial relations, because an usurper sat on the throne, which the court of Yeddo considered a disgrace to the nation, and, on that account, judged them unworthy of having intercourse with a high-spirited people like the Japanese.

Notwithstanding the summary treatment of the Portuguese envoy in 1640, there came another embassy in 1647 directly from Portugal. Their two ships were enticed into a Bay, and preparations made to burn them. As soon as the commander perceived the intentions of the native authorities, who still supplied them with provisions, and endeavored to deceive them with promises, he determined upon defending himself to the last drop of blood. Under such circumstances the Emperor judged it best to permit their departure. The Dutch trade was at the same time stopped, because the Government at Batavia was accused of having lent a pilot to this expedition, an unaccountable falsehood.

In 1652 a new Emperor ascended the throne and renewed the prohibitions against the exercise of the Christian religion at Desima. The factors, having requested him to continue the favors of his ancestors towards them, received orders to procure for the monarch 10 skins of swans, two or three teeth of mermaids, some elephants gall, milkstones, etc. How these articles were obtained we do not know, but the commands were peremptory.

Whilst the Emperor promised a considerable premium to any one who might betray a Roman Catholic priest, he gave permission to the Chinese Buddhists to establish themselves in the country. One of these famous teachers arrived in consequence from Nanking, and, after having obtained great popularity by propagating the most absurd doctrines of his creed, received a large present in silver and rice from the Governor of Nagasaki for having blessed him before his departure.

The trade with this country was carried on with various success during the latter part of the 17th century. Many chiefs recommended to the Company, either to insist upon greater privileges, or to abandon it entirely. But since some profit accrued from this commerce, the complaints of the servants found never a hearing with the directors, who, in their turn, exhorted their agents to bear insults with patience and conform to the laws of the country. The Governors of Nagasaki, being convinced that the Dutch sooner or later, under existing circumstances, would be obliged to give up the trade, became more indulgent until their clamors were hushed, and then had again recourse to their vexatious measures. Such has been the case to this very day, but the commerce still exists. It would perhaps be prudent to withdraw entirely the factory, and visit Nagasaki only occasionally; such a measure has been under contemplation, but not yet put into execution.

At the conclusion of this paper we would merely mention, that the Italian priest Sidota, who went into the country in 1705, was brought to Nagasaki in order to be examined before the Dutch chief. He refused to hold any communication with heretics, whom he called traitors, and openly avowed that he had come to Japan in order to promulgate popery. He was ent to Yeddo and again interrogated, but still adhered to his former confession, notwithstanding the tortures he had to endure. Being afterwards confined in prison, he baptized several persons. This exasperated the court to such a degree, that the converts were executed, and he himself immured, until his whole body was rotten, and he had died a most miserable death.

Miscellaneous.

SHADE OF THE DEPARTED!—The editor of one of the down west papers gives an account of his office having been for many years haunted by a lounger who had sat there so long that when he died his shadow was found fixed upon the wall.

A CARD.—WORTHY OF NOTICE.— De sellunibrated wokalis, Massa Golden, a gemmen of kuller, is being giving concerts to de Portland folk. Dey is werry well patronise.

ECONOMY.—The Michigan White Pigeon Gazette says "A neighbour of our's informs us that wood goes further when left out of doors, than when well housed: —some of his having gone upwards of a quarter of a mile in one night!"

NOT BAD.—Dr. Nott, president of Union College Schenectady, was lately upon a visit to a gentlemen in Schoharie, but to whom he had never been introduced. Dr. Nott knocked at the door, and it was opened by the gentleman in question, to whom the Doctor thus introduced himself—"I am Nott from Schenectady."—"Not from Schenectady—very well;—then where are you from?" said the gentleman. "From Schenectady," responded the Doctor.—"Bah!"—replicated the gentleman—"you are not from Schenectady and you are from Schenectady—what nonsense is this!—Pray, Sir, who and what are you?"—and thereupon the Doctor, suddenly bethinking himself of his college honours cleared up the difficulty by replying "I am Doctor Nott of Schenectady, at your service."

NOTT AGAIN.—The other day the Dr. Nott above noted was in the news room, when a gentleman went up to him very politely and said—"Pray, sir, is your name Nott?"—"It is Nott" replied the Doctor, who was just then poring over Van Buren's three yard speech. "Not Nott!" cried the gentleman—"why surely Doctor you will not disown your name? I well remember your being pointed out to me in Schenectady as Dr. Nott."—"May be so Sir, may be so" observed the Doctor as he became again busied in Van Burenism; and the gentleman departed full of the impression that Dr. Nott was not right in his mind.

DROLL, BUT TOUCHING.—(from the Star).—In the crowded saloon of Mr. Catlin, at the Indian lecture last night, in the midst of an intensely interesting discourse, a person raised himself on tiptoe and in a solemn and earnest manner said:—"Mr. Catlin, Sir, will you have the goodness to stop for one moment?"—The audience looked with astonishment, and the lecturer paused. "I have lost my little boy in the crowd, and I wish to call him." A dead silence ensued among the 1,200 people there assembled. "Clark Potter!" cried the Father; "Here I am father!" squeaked a shrill little voice in a distant corner. Shouts of laughter followed; the urchin was handed over the heads of the crowd to his anxious parent, and Mr. Catlin proceeded with his lecture in peace.

BAYING THE MOON.—A respectable man in Washington has just been fined twenty dollars for keeping a dog, whose howling o' nights kept the neighbour awake. The man pleaded that on purpose to keep him quiet he had given the dog more sleeping potions than his head was worth. "Try prussic acid," said the humane magistrate; and the man left the place quite shocked.

HOW TO COMMIT MURDER QUIETLY.—Take a young lady, and tell her she has a very pretty foot. She will then wear small thin shoes; go out in the wet; catch a cold; the cold will become a fever; and she will die in a month. The Boston Post says this recipe never fails.

BOTHERATION.—What is that Daniel O'Connell up to now?—asks a corresp. of the Daily Focus. Whereupon the Focus breaketh out with a "Bogs, bother, and blarney, what a question!—Up to?—Why up to a fever heat—bubbling over with blarney—and bothering Booby Bull Esq. with one perpetual botheration."

GETTING ON.—Sam, — how many logs have you sawed, eh?—Why ma'am when I've got this and three other ones done, I'll gave saw'd four!

A Piscatorial compliment to Her Majesty.—Amongst the various demonstrations of respect paid to the birth-day of Her Majesty was one at Grove's fish-shop, where the letters composing the name of Victoria were exhibited in the shop front by red mullets, and the Order of the Garter in smelts. A supendous cod fish and a cock salmon, for the first time, undertook the parts of the lion and the unicorn. Many of Mr. Grove's customers were subsequently horrified at finding they had been devouring "Victoria" and the Star of the Order of the Garter. The lion and unicorn were found excellent with appropriate sauces.

TUESDAY, MAY 22.—The following is, we understand, a correct list of the Ambassadors who will be sent to this country to represent their respective Sovereigns, on the approaching occasion of Her Majesty's Coronation: —France, Marshal Soult; Spain, Marquis De Miraflores; Austria, Prince Schwartzenberg; Belgium, Prince De Ligne; Russia, Count Strogonoff; Prussia, Prince Pulbus; Sweden, Count Gustavus Lowenhielm; Sardinia, Marquis Brignole Sale; Netherlands, M. Van der Capellen; Denmark, Prince Chistrian of Holstein. The most splendid mansions are been taken for the reception of their Excellencies and their numerous suites, and it is reported, no doubt, with great truth, that fetes on the most extensive scale will be given by these representatives, that suitable honor may be done to this Court, and that the Sovereigns whom they respectively represent may be reflected with a becoming manificence.

Duty on Longcloths.

THE GOVERNOR'S REPLY TO MR. THOM.

TANG, Vice-roy of Canton, &c., proclaims to the Hong-merchants for their full information.

On the 11th day of the 8th moon of the 8th year of Taou-kwang (29th September 1838) it appears that the foreign merchant Robert Thom petitioned to the following effect.

It is now several years since your petitioner came to Canton—and he has been exclusively engaged in selling Cotton Piece goods, Woollen manufactures, and other articles of that description. He begs to state, that in examining Longcloths for duty there are first, second, and third qualities, of which hitherto musters have been preserved, but that the people whom His Excellency the present Hoppo sends to examine cargo, do not in any case follow the old established regulations. Your petitioner has frequently represented this to the whole of the Hong-merchants, but they invariably meet him with the excuse, "that the Hoppo having once put it in his book, cannot alter it &c," Again, in reference to the longcloths known here as the 60 and 72 qualities, they have hitherto been esteemed as goods of the second class, whereas the present Hoppo makes them all pay the duty of first class; this fact the whole of the Hong-merchants are perfectly aware of, it forms a specimen of the hardship we are now labouring under.

Your petitioner begs to state, that on the 3rd day of the present moon, Hughes's ship (the Faerie Queene) delivered cargo, which was indeed of second quality, and that two of the Hoppo's servants, namely Chow-tseang and his comrade did not open the bales to examine but in an irregular disorderly way put them all down as of first quality, which fact there are witnesses to prove. Your petitioner then took his longcloths, and before all people cut off a fragment, which he shewed to the Hong-merchants separately, who on seeing it exclaimed "this is, indeed longcloth of the second quality!" Now altho' the Hong-merchants clearly know the fact, yet your petitioner, being aware that they are timid of heart and that they dare not, when in the presence of His excellency the Hoppo, make a bold exposition of his grievance, found himself under the necessity of petitioning the Hoppo, and what sort of reply has he got?

"It appears that the said Hong-merchants have presented me a foreign petition written in the Chinese "character in behalf of the English merchant Robert "Thom which states."—

"Hughes's ship having arrived at Canton, permission "to examine the cargo according to old regulations "was duly requested. On the 3rd day of the present "month the said Thom had fifteen bales of white "longcloths of the second quality containing six "hundred pieces, of which a muster is now enclosed "and your servant entered them all to pay the duty "first quality goods and further he had 150 pcs. of "coarse grey cloths, of which 30 pieces were charged "as second quality. Your petitioner begs to state, "that in respect to their quality and in respect to the "duty they pay, they have hitherto been fixed regulations, and now to take coarse cloth and make fine "of it your petitioner and others have come as far as "the poles of Heaven to do business, and how can "they quietly submit to this stupid blundering? He "has no resoure left but to prepare this petition stating his grievance, and begging that your excellency "will be pleased to give instructions that the duties he "henceforth levied justly, in which case the said Thom "and others will ever pray &c. &c. &c."

"This coming before me the hoppo. I find that on a previous occasion when Jacob's ship (the Parkfield) brought longcloths to Canton—the hong-merchants presented a petition in behalf of the foreigners at the same time handing up several musters, At that time I replied—commanding "that these musters be sent "back, and that afterwards when any longcloths "should come to Canton, no matter whether they were "bleached or grey, they should be examined before all "people by these musters as a standard! and since we "cannot take first quality longcloth, and pass as "second quality, so by what reason can we take goods "that are bona fide coarse, and right or wrong tax them "at the second rate?" and such reply as is duly recorded."

"Now in the case of the said foreign merchant Thom, who it appears has brought longcloths to Canton in "Hughes,s ship, as these must have been examined clearly before all men and the qualities duly discriminated when entered for duty, (this when the bales were never opened at all!!!) what means this said foreigner when the time is already past, by madly sending in his petitions to us, scheming thereby to obtain a reduction of his duties? This plainly shows that the said hong-merchants and linguists are in league with, and are stirring him up to embarrass the revenues of the country! How can we permit change." and words to that effect.

Your petitioner on receiving and reading this document, was filled with amazement! Because that in the previous case of Jacob's ships, the foreign merchant having petitioned your Excellency, and your Excellency having replied that "henceforth in all matters of this kind we should petition the hoppo, and not as before apply to your excellency's tribunal, thereby giving trouble and annoyance &c, " how should your petitioner dare again to trouble and annoy! It is only that the hoppo not condescending to redress our grievances, your petitioner and others have no one to appeal to! they can only take the fragment of cloth, which was cut off (as previously stated) and enclose it to your Excellency, begging that your Excellency will not allow the men from afar to be pinned into a corner! And it further appears that in a postscript he petitions, —since the time that his Excellency the present hoppo assumed the duties of his office, he has erroneously rated several tens of thousands of pieces of longcloths, and we foreigners have suffered no small loss thereby. Again it is reported that the hoppo with his own mouth has commanded his servants to the effect that "any "white cloth they may find, without discriminating "whether it be coarse or fine, they are alike to rate it "for duty as if of the first quality! Every body says so, and what sort of language is this! Now, as the hoppo has knowingly made these erroneous entries in his books and cannot change them, he ought to be made to refund the amount! what is there unreasonable in this? Although in this petition there are many expressions which may be looked upon as bold and impertinent, still the facts are all quite true! if there should be found a single letter false or unreal, your petitioner will gladly submit to punishment, &c. &c.

Now all this coming before me, the Viceroy, I find that for examining longcloths for duties, there have hitherto been fixed rules to go by. It appears that when on a previous occasion the foreign merchants Jardine and others petitioned, saying, "that the present hoppo's "officers did not rate the goods for duty in conformity "with old custom"—at that time the hoppo deliberated and decided, that "afterwards when any foreign "merchants should import longcloths, at the time "when they were to be examined, they should take "their bleached and grey goods of every kind, and having got them clearly examined in the presence of all "people, they were to take musters of their first, "second and third quality cloths, and send them up to "the hoppo, and he having again examined them, "should stamp them, and issue them to be preserved "as a standard for examining goods in future," and he commanded the Hong-merchants to impress this edict upon the foreign merchants, that they might obey accordingly, all of which is recorded. This plan of the hoppo's was an exceedingly sagacious one and had the said foreign merchants, when they brought their longcloths to Canton, in reality obeyed the hoppo's edict, and at the time of examining cargo "taken their goods "and had them clearly looked at in the presence of "all people, and selected themselves musters of their "first, second, and third qualities, and sent them up "to the hoppo to be stamped and preserved, to serve as "a criterion when examining goods in future, so that "the precise qualities might be discerned at a single "glance," they, the hoppo's officers, would never have dared to take coarse and make fine of it!

Now in reference to what the petition states, that "the longcloths which came up in Hughes's ship, were "really of the second quality, and that the hoppo's "servants Chowtseang and others, did not open the "bales to examine, but in a blundering irregular manner entered it all as of the first quality" &c., this I say shows that the said foreigner opposed, and would not submit, to the orders, namely, "to send up to the "hoppo, and request the stamped musters so serve as a "comparative standard to examine his goods by," and that he hoped to take first quality cargo longcloths, and per fas et nefas have it rated as of second quality; and besides all this to trouble me with his petitions at his own will and pleasure, comes under the head of madness and rashnes! Then, as regards the fragment of cloth, which the said foreigner cut off and sent to me, wh ther or not that be in reality second quality, or if it be only a crafty scheme to oppose having his goods examined so that he may thereby obtain a reduction of duty; if we do not examine the goods clearly a second time, then we shall not sufficiently be able to persuade the foreigners of the justice of our proceeding.

Besides therefore taking the fragment of cloth which has been sent me, and transmitting it to the hoppo, that he may examine it carefully, comparing it with all the goods that at present arrive, to see whether or not it be the same, and that in distinguishing the different grades and qualities he act openly and fairly, and moreover that he instruct his myrmidons, that afterwards when examining longcloths, they must do so clearly before all men, justly and honestly discriminating between the different kinds,—besides all this, I unite the circumstances and issue this edict, and when it comes to the hands of the said Hong-merchants, let them forthwith communicate it to the said foreigner, that he obey accordingly. As before, let the Hong-merchants command the foreigners, that any one having longcloths coming to Boton, must submit to the hoppo's fixed regulations and request his stamped musters to serve as a standard of comparison, for levying the duties. Do not again (oh ye foreigners!) with your hearts full of tricks, opposition, and perverseness, come to my tribunal whining at and annoying me, which will lead to unpleasant consequences! Hasten! Hasten! these are the commands.

Taoukwang, 18th year, 8th moon, and 13th day.

(Translated by Mr. Thom.)

The Sir David Ogilby.

From the Sydney Herald, 11th June.

The English Brig Sir David Ogilby, arrived and anchored in Rover Harbour, in the island of Beta Lil, on the 26th April, 1838. She sailed from this harbour on Monday, the 30th, sea account, at 4, P. M. for Beretta, a town on the same island, and arrived and anchored at this port on the same day, at 10. A. M. On Tuesday, 2d of May, about 11, A. M. an affray commenced with the natives, concerning which are the following particulars, viz.—

Captain Hutchins had made preparations to establish a fish house at Beretta, and had landed one pot for the purpose, and had the trade chest filled, and muskets and powder for the establishment on deck ready to send ashore. A man called Rover Jack was to go ashore to take charge of the establishment and carry it on while the vessel was on a cruise. She was in the act of getting under way—anchor apeak, and were hoisting the foretopsail. A great number of natives on deck, and still more in canoes around and alongside. One hand was in the foretop overhauling the rigging, and Captain H. on the quarter deck, with his cutlass in his hand, and Funnowlangy, the Chief of Beretta, behind him near the taffrel. It is supposed that the plot was conceived by this Chief on the instant—for numbers of the natives had hold of the foretopsail halliards and were otherwise dispersed about deck; and Funnowlangy had a club passed to him from a canoe astern, and just as Captain H. sung out "belay" to the foretopsail, he was struck by the Chief with this club on the head, and fell dead instantly. The Chief immediately jumped down the cabin, thinking that as the Captain was dead, possession was certain. The Mate (Mr. White) seeing the Captain fall, run to his assistance unarmed, when some of the natives took Captain H.'s cutlass and attacked the Mate, and severely wounded him in several places on the head—he fell on the dead body of the Captain. One hand (William Brooks) jumped overboard, and was killed in the water by the na-

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—The Chinese are, we think, recovering a little from the alarm regarding further heavy importations of LONGCLOTHS, and although we have heard of no actual sales, the market is firmer for both white and grey cloths. Good YARN is also in better demand, but the prices offered are still very low; the inferior kinds are without action.

WOOLLENS.—Sales of about 2000 pieces SPANISH STRIPES, have been effected during the week of good quality at 1.35 @ 1.40, and the demand is more steady. There is also some demand for LONGELLS, and some have changed hands at 8½ @ 8¾. CAMLETS, Dutch as English do not advance as was anticipated from the very short supply.

METALS.—No material change, but LEAD, if any thing, rather lower.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—A considerable sale of PEPPER, is reported at Macao at 7.20. In BETELNUT, we have not transactions or change. RATTANS and TIN much as before.

RICE,—is even more depressed then before.

COTTON.—The demand for BOMBAY COTTON, has been steady, and sales to some extent have been made in small parcels principally of inferior and middling sorts at previous rates. The finer kinds have advanced 2 @ 3 mace, and may be quoted from 9 @ 9.7, but there is little on hand. In Madras nothing has been doing, and good Tinnevelly cannot be quoted higher than 10 @ 10.3, and without demand. A sale of Bengal—7 @ 800 bales—middling Bantia was effected 2 or 3 days since at 10.6 which may be considered rather under previous prices, but holders are generally firm.

OPIUM.—There is as yet very little movement in Opium. At Whampoa, we understand, the boats are again commencing, but to very limited extent. There is, however, a little more enquiry for the Bengal drug, and as the brokers are beginning to make their appearance, the demand, it is to be hoped, will revive. A good deal of Malwa has lately changed hands at rather low rates—585 @ 570—principally for delivery on the coast. The deliveries to the 8th were tolerably good, viz, Patna, old, 20, new 192; Benares, old—, new, 56; Malwa, 568; Total 836 chests.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—There have been few or no arrivals from the country, and the quantity altogether come down at present, including that for the Silk manufactures, is said to be not more than 2,500 bales, and the holders are still firm in their demands for upwards of $ 600 per Picul, but in which, as the season advances, they must relax.

TEA.—We hear of no transactions yet.

tives. There were muskets and ammunition in the arm chest in the foretop, and the man in the fore top stationed there to overhaul the rigging commenced a fire on the natives on deck. Two others gained the foretop by the forestays; one (Rover Jack) being wounded in the foot with a cutlass in the act of going up. The cook was knocked down. Some of the hands jumped below for arms, there being none on deck save the Captain's cutlass, which was in possession of the natives), and attempting to regain the deck were met by the native's clubs and wounded. The natives now had possession of the decks. Those below, however, aided by those in the foretop, succeeded in killing some of them, which frightened the rest. (seeing some of their number drop), and they jumped overboard. All this was transacted in between five and ten minutes. During this time the Chief was in the cabin rummaging for trade. thinking the natives were finishing what he had so effectually begun. John Hunter jumped on deck from below, and seeing the decks about clear, went aft and saw the Chief in the cabin, and immediately jumped below with nothing in his hand but a hammer. The Chief made a blow at him with his club, which he partly warded off with the hammer, but received it on his head. They then clinched, and during the scuffle, Hunter stabbed the Chief between the eyes with a knife, the blade breaking off in his head about an inch from the handle. This, however. did not kill him, he fought hard, and was at last shot by the people from off deck, down the skylight. This ended the affray, (the people having regained possession of the decks), during which the natives had taken the boat which was towing astern, and muskets and powder which were on deck at the commencement. The vessel was immediately got under weigh for Lebooker, and got out of Motorique passage before dark, and into Lebooker the next morning, Thursday, 3d of May, with the anchor hanging at the bows. The Chief was have overboard on the passage. Another wounded Chief was found in the forecastle, who had crawled there during the affray, and was finished and hove overboard during the passage to Lebooker.

We the undersigned affirm that the above particulars are (as near as can be remembered) strictly true.

Saturday, 13th October.

By the arrival of the Mary Chilton, from Boston in 117 days, we have new from that city to the 10th June. Commercial prosperity is, on the whole, represented as reviving since the banks in Newyork and several other cities have resumed specie payments. The United States Bank does not however intend to resume silver issue until the 1st July, though it is said that they possess treasure to the amount of 8 millions. Most of the journals we have seen, and who are all Whigs, or opposed to the present administration unite in blaming Mr. Biddle's conduct in this respect, who, instead of confining his operations to finances only, makes use of the power with which the funds of his bank invest him, for political purposes, and thus unduly attempts to oppose a banking system, such as he advocates, to Government, and to dictate to the Legislature by means of the banking interest. From the observations we read in most of the papers it appears that many of the former admirers of Mr. Biddle no longer support him, and it seems as if he had ventured too far, and that his injudicious opposition to the resumption of Specie payment will in the end strengthen the very Administration he hoped to coerce to his own terms.

Serious disturbances, connected with slavery-abolition, had taken place in Philadelphia; the mob injured and destroyed several chapels, and some persons were wounded.

Occasional skirmishes still take place on the Canadian frontier, between the Canadian militia and citizens of the United States. An American Steam boat was fired into by the Militia on one hand, and, on the other, some British officers were mobbed at Detroit.

The french blocade of the Mexican ports still continued, and the Mexican Government shewed no disposition to agree to the terms demanded by the French. It is a somewhat singular coincidence that France should at the same time blocade the coasts of two American Republics, viz. Mexico and Buenos Ayres, but if the French version of these Affairs be correct, these young states well deserve a little correction.

We have per John O'Gaunt received the Javasche Courants to the 15th ult., but they contain little matter of interest.

Sydney papers to 4th July have been received; we copy from one of them the account of an affray with natives, on board the Ogilby.

The following is the correspondence which has taken place between Mr. Layton and the Hoppo, in consequence of the former's boat, when coming from Macao, having been, contrary to usage, boarded by Customhouse officers. No reply to Mr. Layton's rejoinder has yet been received.

"Yu, Superintendent of the maritime Customs of Kwangtung, to the Hong merchants, requiring that they fully acquaint themselves with the contents hereof.

They, the said merchants, have just presented a foreign address from the English foreign merchant Layton, and others, which is written in Chinese, and is of the following tenor:—

"Upon the 3rd instant, having procured a passport, we left Macao to repair to Canton. At the several custom house stations on the route we were duly examined and passed: but as we approached the Western Fort station at Canton, we were suddenly, and before we had reached it, impeded by several small boats; these boats having nothing to distinguish them, we could not tell what might be their character; and having interfered to examine us in the middle of our course, we could have no security that plunder was not their object. When we desired that they should proceed to the station to examine, they, to our great astonishment, murderously rushed forward, using violent threats, and striking about with knives. Such violent, unruly, and injurious conduct cannot be suffered to pass unpunished by your Excellency. We have therefore to intreat that you will cause the people, policemen or others, of the boats aforesaid to be taken and severely punished for their offence, and so prevent the imitation or continuance of such conduct."

From this it appears, that the said foreigners, Layton and others, having procured a passport, were on their way from Macao to Canton, and had been examined and allowed to pass by all the Custom house stations on the route, when, as they approached the Western Fort station, they were impeded, violently threatened, and beaten, by a party in small boats. At the same time a report has been sent me from the Western Fort station, of the following tenor:

"On the 5th instant, about nine in the morning, the tide-waiter whose turn it was to be upon the river was anchored, in a revenue boat, near to the bamboo rafts, when he saw a foreign boat passing, on its way in, by the sandy spit, on the opposite bank of the river. The revenue boat's punts were there upon sent to examine: but the foreigners with fierce, boisterous, and noisy, opposition, prevented them from examining; refused to show the Macao passport; and proceeded at once to the landing place of the factories, where they landed four cloth bundles, and two boxes. We report these circumstances, requesting an investigation of their conduct."

The statements contained in these two representations are not alike, and it is difficult to insure that there is nothing intentionally held back and concealed. While ordering the tide-waiter who was engaged in cruising upon the river to return to my office and await a strict investigation of the subject,—it is also to be inquired,—seeing that it is customary for the revenue boat to remain anchored off the bamboo floats, for the prevention of smuggling,—why the passport that had been procured was not shown at the Western Fort? why the bundles and packages on board were not allowed to be examined? and why, when the cruiser made inquiries, the passport was not shown? The said Hong merchants should especially seek to inquire into the true merits of the case, and report them for my information that I may thoroughly deal with the matter.

I therefore issue these orders, requiring the Hong merchants, on the receipt of them, immediately to investigate the subject faithfully, and to report truly, without in the slightest degree garnishing or glozing over anything, lest they incur an inquiry themselves.—Hasten, Hasten! A special order."

Taoukwang, 18th year, 8th month, 17th day,

Answer to the above from Mr. Layton.

I have received your Excellency's reply to my petition in which your Excellency has forwarded to me a report from the western Fort detailing the circumstances of certain persons impeding the passage of my boat on the 5th Inst. Your Excellency is pleased to observe "that the statements contained in the two representations are not alike." This is true, for the Report from the western Fort does not make mention of the use of the swords, and of the violent conduct of the people who boarded my boat. I now beg leave respectfully to assure your Excellency that it is not the custom to impede foreigners whilst travelling under the authority of your Excellency's Passport; and that during six years I have continually passed from Macao to Canton, and from Canton to Macao, and that upon no occasion have I previously met with any vexatious impediment near the western Fort.

Moreover, if soldiers, or your Excellency's Officers, at any time desire to search boats in which foreigners are, I would respectfully submit to you that it is not customary to come in Tunkea boats without flags or any marks of authority. Now these persons did this; and without any Flag, or emblem of authority rudely boarded our boat—did not ask for the Passport, or state their object. The Passport was in my hand, and they did not address themselves to me requesting to see it, but violently commenced an attack by attempting to lower the sail, dropping the Anchor, and by cruelly beating the Boatmen with swords. To prevent murder and ill consequences, these swords were wrested from the person who used them by my companion in the boat. Subsequently the Tide-waiter having a white Flag with your Excellency's name, approached in a four-oared or six oared boat and the persons who had thus behaved went to his boat. I then offered to go either to Chop House, or to the Company's Stairs; and the tide-waiter eventually assented to proceed to the Company's Stairs, and I these gave the boat in charge to the Linguists, and I called upon the tide-waiter to punish the persons who had used swords.

He said that he could not, but told me that he would ask your Excellency to do so. He had in the mean time allowed them to escape.

When the Tide-waiter was in my boat at the Company's Stairs he did not ask to see the Passport, or to examine the boat. The latter I could not hinder him from doing. The Passport I would not give to him although had he when in my boat requested to see it, I would willingly have shewn it.

With regard to the things landed, not any were taken out of the boat by my directions, but two small boxes of letters and a small box of Dollars which I could not leave in the Boat until I received your Excellency's answer. In conclusion, I again pray your Excellency to punish there persons, and not to permit Foreign boats to be thus irregularly boarded by persons who do not shew any authority for so doing,—and not to permit the use of Swords I also pray your Excellency not to permit the searching of foreign boats excepting at the custom-sry stations. If such persons as these offenders shall go unpunished, and no warning be given to others, your Excellency must expect that if your Servants use Swords, my countrymen, who are expert in Fire-arms, will use them without mercy. This I truly wish may never take place, and I hope that to convince Foreigners of your Excellency's sense of Justice you will punish the offenders in their sight.

Our readers will find an interesting account of the intercourse of the Dutch with Japan, for which we are indebted to an esteemed correspondent.

We hear that H. M. Superintendent, Capt. Elliot, has lately been at Whampoa to enquire into the particulars of a rather serious affray that has taken place on board the John Bull, in which we learn that the mate of the ship was seriously injured, and others from the fleet at Whampoa, who hastened to the Officers assistance, have also been wounded. We have not heard what measures have been taken for the punishment of the rioters.

It appears that the foolish warfare between the republics of Chile and Peru is still being prosecuted. When the Porcia, in the beginnieg of July, left Valparaiso, a force of 5000 men was embarking there with the purpose of being landed near Lima, and attacking the Capital itself. So small a force, unless they find a strong party in their favor, is not very likely to make a strong impression, and the result will be probably similar to that of the first expedition, with that exception only that General Santa Cruz will take measures that they not again become faithless to their word, but keep them prisoners until peace is finally established, which precaution, had he taken before, would probably have ended the war long ere this.

The John Gilpin from this had arrived at Valparaiso after the very extraordinarily short passage of 76 days.

Hudson's Bay Company's Arctic Discovery Expedition.

From the London Morning Chronicle.

The lively interest which the British public have for such a length of time manifested in the farther discovery of the Arctic regions, induced the Hudson's Bay Company to determine on equipping an expedition solely at their own expense, and composed of their own officers and servants, with the view of endeavoring to complete the survey of the Northern shores of the American continent.

The formation and equipment of the expedition were entrusted to Mr. Simpson, the resident governor, in the spring of 1836. That gentleman, on his arrival from England at Norway House, Lake Winnipeg, in the month of June in the same year, beat for volunteers for this arduous service, two active and enterprising leaders, Messrs. P. W. Dease and Thomas Simpson, and twelve men, were immediately selected and forwarded with the necessary supplies to Fort Chipewayan, Athabasca Lake, where they passed the winter of 1836 7. Immediately after the opening of the navigation on the first of June, 1837, the party started from Fort Chipewayan in two small boats which they had constructed in the course of the winter, descended the Slave river, passed the Western end of Great Slave Lake, where they were detained several days by ice, and descended Mackenzie's river to Fort Norman, where they arrived on the 1st July. From Fort Norman they despatched two of their party, with two other men belonging to Fort Norman, to the Eastern end of Great Bear's Lake, for the purpose of erecting a small establishment at which they might take up their quarters for the following winter, and of laying up a stock of provisions preparatory to an extension of their survey in the summer of 1838. These arrangements being made, Messrs. Dease and Simpson, with the remainder of their people, forming a party of twelve in all, continued their route down the Mackenzie, and reached Fort Good Hope, the most Northern establishment belonging to the Company, on the 4th, where they found an assemblage of Hare and Loucheoux Indians, from whom they learned that the Esquimaux had killed three of their party a short time previous, which prevented the discoverers taking an interpreter from that party.

On the 9th of July they reached the ocean by the most westerly mouth of the Mackenzie, making its situation in lat. 68 deg 48 min. 23 sec N., long 136 deg. 36 min. 45 sec. W. They had proceeded but a short distance to seaward when a party of nineteen Esquimaux went off to them from Tent Island, who showed a disposition to be troublesome, but returned to their encampment when they found the party prepared to defend themselves if necessary. The progress of the party along the coast was very slow, owing to frequent obstructions from ice, cold, dense fogs, and strong head winds. On the afternoon of the 11th they reached Point Kay, where they found another encampment of Esquimaux, and where they were detained by a compact body of ice, occupying Phillips Bay until the 14 h. They continued their route till the 17th, when an unbroken pack of ice extending to seaward made them seek the shore in Camden Bay, near a large camp of Esquimaux, who received them kindly.

In the afternoon there appeared a narrow passage of water through the ice stretching outward, and they immediately embarked, but had not proceeded above three miles from the land when the ice suddenly closed upon them, squeezing one of their boats, which, with their provisions and baggage, they had much difficulty in saving; and by means of partages from one piece of ice to another, the oars serving as bridges, they finally got on a large floe, where they passed an inclement and anxious night. On the 20th they reached Foggy Islands Bay, when they were stopped by ice and a violent northeast wind until the 23rd, having on the preceding day made an ineffectual attempt to weather Point Anxiety, in which they narrowly escaped with a thorough drenching. The latitude ashore was 70 deg. 9 min. 48 sec. From this situation they had the satisfaction of discovering a range of the Rocky Mountains to the westward of the Romanzoff chain, and not seen by Sir John Franklin, but being within the limit of his survey, called in the Franklin Range, as a just tribute to his character and merits.

That evening they reached Sir John Franklin's Return Reef, where their survey commenced, that officer having got no farther. Return Reef is one of a chain of reefs which run for twenty miles parallel to the coast, at the distance of about half a league, affording sufficient water within for their small craft. The mainland is very low. From Point Berens [the different rivers, capes, and other remarkable objects between Franklin's Return Reef and Beechey Cape Barrow, were named by Messrs. Dease and Simpson after the Governor and Directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, and other gentlemen connected with the fur trade] to Capt Halkett it forms Harrison's Bay, 46 miles broad, by about a third of that distance in depth. At the bottom of this bay another picturesque branch of the Rocky Mountains range rears its lofty peaks above these flat shores, which they named Pelly's Mountains, in honour of the governor of the company. At their base flows Colvele's River, two miles broad at its mouth, to the south-west of which stands Cape Halkett, when they were detained by a north-east gale the whole of the following day. The country extending to the foot of the mountains appeared to consist of plains covered with short grass and moss, a favourite resort of reindeer, of which they saw numerous herds. Observations were obtained determining Cape Halkett to be in lat. 70 deg. 43 min. N., long. 152 deg. 14 min. W.; the variation of the compass 43 deg. 1 min. 33 sec. E.

Next morning, 26th July, they passed the Gany, a river about one mile broad.

From Cape Halkett the coast turned suddenly off to the WNW. It presented to the eye nothing but a succession of low banks of frozen mud. In the evening they passed the mouth of a large stream which they named Smith's River. From thence, for about nine miles, the coast line is formed of gravel reefs, near the extremity of which, at Fort Pitt, the land tends more to the westward. Here they were detained by ice until the following afternoon, (27th) when an opening presenting itself, they resumed their route. It blew a cutting blast from the north-east, and the salt water froze upon the oars and the rigging. Point Drew, seven miles distant from their last encampment, is the commencement of a bay of considerable size, but extremely shallow and much encumbered with ice. To seaward the ice was still smooth and solid, as in the depth of sunless winter. At midnight they reached a narrow projecting point, across which the peaks of some high icebergs appeared. This point they named Cape George Simpson, as a mark of respect for the Governor of the Company's territories, to whose excellent arrangements the success of the expedition is in a great measure indebted.

This point was destined to be the limit of their boat navigation, for during the four days they were only able to advance as many miles. The weather was foggy and dismally cold, the wild fowl passed in long flights to the westward, and there seemed little prospect of their being able to reach Beechey's Point Barrow by water. Boat Extreme is situated in lat. 71 deg. 8 min. 24 sec. N., long. 154 deg. 26 min 30 sec W.; variation of compass 42 deg 36 min. 18 sec. E.

Under these circumstances Mr Thomas Simpson undertook to complete the journey on foot, and accordingly started on the 1st of August with five men, Mr. Dease and the other five remaining in charge of the boats.

The pedestrians carried with then their arms, some ammunition, pemican, a small oiled canvass canoe for the crossing of rivers, the necessary astronomical instruments, and a few trinkets for the natives.

It was one of the worst days of the whole season, and the fog was so dense that the party were under the necessity of rigidly following the tortuous outline of the coast, which for twenty miles formed a sort of irregular inland bay, (being guarded without by a series of gravel reefs,) the shore of which was almost on a level with the water, and intersected by innumerable salt creeks trough which they waded, besides three considerable rivers which they traversed in their portable canoe. Next day the weather improved, and at noon Mr. Simpson had an observation for lat. in 71 deg. 9 min. 45 sec. The land now inclined to the south-west, and continued very low and muddy, and, as on the preceding day, abounding in salt creeks, whose waters were at the freezing temperature. The party had proceeded about ten miles, when to their dismay the coast suddenly turned off to the southward, forming an inlet as far as the eye could reach.

At the same moment they descried at no great distance a small camp of Exquimaux to which they immediately directed their steps. The men were absent hunting, and the women and children took to their boat in the greatest alarm, leaving behind them an infirm man, who was in an agony of fear. A few words of friendship removed his apprehensions, and brought back the fugitives, who were equally surprised and delighted to behold white men. They set before the party fresh rein-deer meat and seal oil.

Mr. Simpson now determined to adopt a more expeditious mode of travelling, by obtaining the loan of one of their "oomiaks," or family skin canoes, to convey the party to Point Barrow, with which, from a chart drawn by one of the women, it appeared that these people were well acquainted.

Four oars were fitted with lashings to this strange craft. Before starting the hunters arrived, and presents of tobacco, awls, buttons, &c were made to all the inmates of the encampment, with which they were highly gratified.

Deare's Inlet is five miles broad at this place, yet so low is the land that the one shore is just visible from the other in the clearest weather. It now again blew strongly from the Northeast, bringing back the cold dense fog; but the traverse was effected by the aid of the compass. The waves ran high, and the skin-boat surmounted them with great buoyancy; the party encamped on the west side of the inlet. The banks there were of frozen mud, ten or twelve feet high; the country within was perfectly flat, abounding in small lakes, and produced a very short grass, but no where had the thaw penetrated more than two inches beneath the surface, while under water along the shore the bottom was still impenetrably frozen. Not a log of wood was to be found in this land of desolation; but our party followed the example of the natives, and made their fire of the roots of the dwarf willow in a little chimney of turf. Next morning, August 3, the fog cleared for awhile, but it was still bitterly cold, and the swell beat violently on the outside of a heavy line of ice which lay packed upon the shore.

To weather this was a work of danger; but the good qualities of their boat, after a severe trial, carried them safely through. The land ran out for five miles to the northward, then turned off to the NW., beyond which, at Point Christie, the lat. 71 deg. 19 min. 33 sec. was observed. From thence the coast trended more westerly for ten miles, forming two points and a bay, which Mr. Simpson named after chief factors Charles and Rowand and chief trader Ross. The party then came up to westward of a large bay, where they halted for two or three hours to await the dispersion of the fog, not knowing which way to steer. In the evening their wish was gratified, and the weather from that time was sensibly ameliorated. The bay was now ascertained to be only four miles in width; the depth half-way across was 3½ fathom on a bottom of sand; that of Deases inlet was afterwards found to be two fathoms, muddy bottom, being the greatest depth retween Return Reef and Point Barrow, except at 10 miles SE. from Cape Halkett, where 3 fathoms were sounded on our return. After crossing Mackenzie's Bay the coast again trended for eight or nine miles to the W. N W. A compact body of ice extended all along, and beyond the reach of vision to the seaward; but the party carried their light vessel within that formidable barrier, and made their way through the narrow channels close to the shore.

At midnight they passed the mouth of a fine deep river, a quarter of a mile wide, to which Mr. Simpson gave the name of the Bellevue, and in less than an hour afterward the rising sun gratified him with the view of Point Barrow, stretching out to N. N. W. They soon crossed Elson Bay, which, in the perfect calm, had acquired a tough coating of young ice, but had much difficulty in making their way through a broad and heavy pack that rested upon the shore. On reaching it, and seeing the ocean extending away to the Southward, they hoisted their flag, and with three cheers took possession of their discoveries in his majesty's name.

Point Barrow is a long low spit, composed of gravel and coarse sand, which the pressure of the ice has forced up into numerous mounds, that, viewed from a distance, assume the appearance of huge boulder rocks. At the spot where the party landed it is only a quarter of a mile across, but is broader toward its termination. The first object that presented itself on looking round the landing place was an immense cemetery. The bodies lay exposed in the most horrible and disgusting manner, and many of them appeared so fresh that the men became alarmed that the cholera, or some other dreadful disease, was raging among the natives. Two considerable camps of the latter stood at no great distance on the point, but none of the inmates ventured to approach till our party first visited them, and, with the customary expressions of friendship, dissipated their apprehensions.

A brisk traffic then began, after which the women formed a circle and danced to a variety of airs, some of which were pleasing to the ear. The whole conduct of these people was friendly in the extreme; they seemed to be well acquainted with the character, if not the persons, of white men, and were passionately fond of tobacco.

To the northward enormous icebergs covered the ocean; but on the western side there was a fine open channel, which the Esquimaux assured the party extended all along to the southward, and so inviting was the prospect in that direction, that had such been his object Mr. Simpson would not have hesitated a moment to prosecute the voyage to Cook's Inlet in his skin canoe. The natives informed him that whales were numerous to the northward of the point, and seals every where sporting among the ice.

It was high water between one and two o'clock A. M. and P. M.; the rise of the tide fourteen inches, and the flow came from the westward. Observations were obtained which determined the position of the landing place to be in lat. 71 deg. 23 min. 33 sec. N. 156 deg. 20 min. 0 sec. W., agreeing closely with the observations of Mr. Elson. Then bidding adieu to their good-humoured and admiring entertainers, the party set out on their return.

They reached the western mouth of the M'Kenzie on the 17th of August, and Fort Norman on the 4th of September, from whence their report is dated on the following day.

From Fort Norman they were about to proceed to the eastern end of Great Bear's Lake, there to pass the winter, from thence haul their boats across to the Coppermine River, and resume their survey to the eastward at the opening of the navigation in July next, with the view of connecting the discoveries of Sir John Franklin and Captain Back from Point Turnagain to Great Fish River, in which, from the activity and perseverance of the leaders, it is confidently hoped they will be successful.

Scraps.

A nobleman's nose-bag.—"Here it is," cried the noble lord, as his servant handed to him a tolerably large velvet bag, crammed with apparently some weighty substance. "Now, Plucky, lad, you ask me if I have travelled? I'll just trouble you to cast your eyes over these," and with a word the peer emptied the bag of its contents, which fell in a rattling shower upon the table.

"Stones!" shouted Plucky, jumping at the sound.

"Look at 'em; they are stones—just look at 'em" cried the nobleman and born sena'r with a triumphant air.

Young Plucky picked up the stones, one by one, and having minutely examined a dozen of them, exclaimed —"Good God! my lord— why, they're noses."

"Every one of 'em—warrant 'em all noses," cried Lord Stap; "noses of both genders and of all shapes, from the nose of Diana to the snout of Pan. That's fan, if you like. A hundred noses! And now, I think, Plucky, you'll not ask me again if I have travelled."

"Really, my lord, I'm very dull—I don't apprehend; I don't see the connexion of your travels with these noses," said Plucky.

"Don't you? well then, permit me to illumine you, Mr. Plucky; and to assure you, upon the honor of a nobleman, whose life he is proud to say has been spent in pursuit of the humorous, that these noses are from the most eminent galleries and gardens of the most superb cities of Europe."

"Copies?" asked Plucky.

"Copies be d—d! chipped them all off the original statues, with my own fingers, my own hammer, and my own chisel," said the peer.

"You did, my lord?" exclaimed the astonished Plucky,

"I did; took me some time to do it, too; for I had to watch my opportunity. However, I flatter myself that I succeeded wonderfully—indeed, I may say that I scarcely visited a city throughout the continent that I didn't quit it with a broken nose. That is fun, if you like," exclaimed the mutilating nobleman.

Very good—Mr. B., a gentleman once well known in Leverett street, and who is distinguished for his size as well as his wit, remarked to a friend a day or two since, that he thought of making a trip to Europe. "Indeed," said his friend, "that will be a Sirius affair." "Oh no," replied Mr. B., "it will be a Great Western concern."

The town of Boston was first lighted with lamps about the year 1783. Three hundred lamps were imported from England and gave occasion to a criticism by Nathan Byles. He told an old lady of his parish who had been an admirer of Whitfied, that "300 new lights had come over from England, and that the selectmen were going to hang 'em all in irons.

Damp tinder.—The following dialogue is said to have taken place on board of a sloop in the North river between the captain and boy:

Capt.—Boy, put a lighted candle in the binnacle.

Boy.—The fire is all out, sir, and the tinder is so wet it will not catch.

Capt.—Throw it overboard, and burn some new immediately.

Ay, ay, sir!

A matrimonial consequence.—A maiden lady, not remarkable for either youth, beauty, or good temper, came for advice to Mr. Arnold as to how she should get rid of a troublesome suitor. "Oh, Mary, marry him," was the advice. "Nay, I would see him hanged first." "No, madam, marry him, as I said to you, and I assure you he will not be long before he hangs himself."

DUTIES ON LONGCLOTHS. The following answer has been received from the Hoppo with regard to the duties on Longcloths, the unsettled state of which has for some time past occasioned much vexation and delay in the despatch of business. The manner in which all future differences on this head are obviated by the Hoppo by the new arrangement he has made, will, we think, be considered as favorable as could be expected, though not so much so as we were led to hope from the consultations in Consoo by the Hong merchants, according to which as we, in our commercial remarks, a fortnight ago, stated, all grey cloths were to be rated as third, and all white as one half second and one half 1st quality; whilst by the Hoppo's decree the former are all to be considered as lowest quality, but of the white seven tenths are to be rated as first, and three tenths only as second quality, thus raising the duty on these just 10 cents per piece beyond what the Hong-merchants recommended it to be. Though, therefore, the duty itself can by this arrangement hardly be said to have been sensibly raised on what was paid before, and that in this respect importers have every reason to be satisfied, yet the greater proportion of the white cloths being declared to be of first quality, it necessarily is somewhat unfavorable to the collection of the Consu-tax, supposing that a greater proportion than is assumed by the Chinese Custom house, of white goods, as imported, are really of the second quality, first quality being exempted from that tax, to which second and third only are liable. On the other hand however, the bulk of importations being of unbleached cloths, it is of course highly favorable to importers that these henceforward are liable to the lowest duty only.

The Hoppo's reply.

Yu, by Imperial appointment, Superintendent of the Maritime Customs of Kwangtung, &c., &c., issues this official reply.

It appears, that the foreign merchant Robert Thom has laid before the Governor an appeal in regard to the assessment of taxes upon long cloths; in consequence of which I have received from the Governor a communication, pointing out the imperative necessity, that, in the future examination and assessment of longcloths, they should be examined openly before all men, and should be justly and faithfully distinguished into their several classes and assessed accordingly.

Upon the receipt hereof, I carefully examined the several documents recorded upon the subject, those both of former and of later date; and I found, that the representations made by foreigners regarding long cloths have been not twice or thrice merely, but often, reiterated. I therefore directed the parcel of long cloths to be brought to my office, where they were one by one publicly examined by me, with the Hong merchants Saoqua and the linguists present before me. Finding that there was a great diversity in regard to coarseness or fineness of quality among the bleached cloths, and also some variety among the grey cloths,—finding, also, that, in the sale of long cloths in the shops of Canton, four or five distinctions of quality and of price are always made, and that there is no fixed rule for ascertaining these distinctions,—it was plain to me that in the examination of the goods it must be a matter of difficulty to separate them into classes, that they must often be rated too high or too low, and that the existing rule is not in fact sufficiently precise. I also deemed, that, should I amalgamate the several qualities, and adopt a half-and-half mode of assessment,—such as to regard 500 pieces in every thousand pieces of bleached cloths as of first quality, and 500 pieces as of second quality,—and so with grey cloths, to regard 500 pieces in very thousand pieces as of second quality, and 500 pieces as of third quality,—and should I assess the duties by this rule, I should be going to the utmost bounds of admissible compliance.

I then compassionately took into consideration, that the foreigners referred to are of a region separated from this by many seas, over which they must cross to arrive here; and I could not bear to deal with them but with indulgence and tenderness. I therefore at once directed, that the grey cloths, should, without regard to texture, be rated as coarse, or of third quality, in all assessments of duties. As to the bleached cloths, I directed Saoqua together with his brother-merchants to enjoin my commands on the foreigners, that they should equitably decide how they ought to be rated.

This having been done, it now appears that the said senior merchants represent, that bleached cloths should, without reference to their being of first or of second quality, be rated and assessed, one half as of first, and one half as of second quality; while the grey cloths should all be rated and assessed as coarse. Now I found, on my examination of the cloths, that there were fine and coarse qualities among the grey as well as among the bleached cloths, and therefore in directing that the grey cloths should all be charged duty as of third quality, I was exhibiting tenderness beyond the record. When then the said merchants were commanded to consider in what manner the bleached cloths should be assessed, they certainly ought to have considered thereof equitably. It is requisite to constitute a just and equitable arrangement, that the national fisc should incur no danger, as well as that the foreign property should suffer no injury. But should I adopt the arrangement suggested by the said merchants, I perceive that there will necessarily be detriment to the revenue of customs. Bearing in mind, however, the representation made that the present market prices are very low, which is really the case, I felt it right, for a time, to adapt the law to the circumstances, that thus I may exhibit due tenderness.

Hereafter, all long cloths brought by foreigners to Canton for trade, shall be assessed for duties,—the grey or unbleached as all of third quality, without reference to actual texture,—and the bleached as being seven-tenths of first quality, and three-tenths of second quality, also without regard to actual texture. By this arrangement, it will only be necessary when examining goods, to ascertain the number of pieces bleached and unbleached, and to reckon the duties accordingly. Thus there will be no further difficulty, arising out of the impossibility of distinguishing qualities, and consequently all further contentions on that score will be avoided.

Should the prices of the bleached or grey cloths hereafter rise, the proportions alloted to each quality must be again brought under consideration, that the assessment may be adapted to the time.

Let the senior Hong-merchants enjoin these commands upon the foreigners, that they may revere and obey, and address me in reply, to enable me to answer the communication of the Governor, and to place this correspondence on the records. This is what is required.

The following letter has been addressed by the Hong-merchants to the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, giving warning as to the carrying on transactions in future with the insolvent Hong of Kin-qua, and we cannot blame the Hong-merchants for their determination in future not to be held answerable for any debts that may be contracted by this Hong after their warning has been given. Insolvent hongs are but too frequently tempted by their necessities to carry on business at a loss, and if no check is put to such practice, it will soon become a system, and, by increasing the claims upon the Consu-tae, to an enormous extent, must eventually considerably embarrass the whole trade by burthening it with heavy duties.

"A respectful communication. The debts owing to you, Gentlemen, by Kingqua's Hong, you have agreed to receive payment of in the course of an extended period. This is a good turn or your part. Our Consoo guaranteeing the payment of so large a debt, is also an act beyond the record, and must not be dragged forward as a precedent. Our Consoo has now established certain rules, in consequence of the conduct of the Hingtae Hong, which by buying dear and selling cheap, in the course of a few years, was in debt to the amount of twenty odd lakhs of dollars, a thing which never before happened,—and thereby involved all our Hongs. For this reason, we have established certain rules, to prevent any Hong from following the example of the Hingtae Hong. But the Teenpoo (Kingqua's) Hong has hitherto been carrying on trade in a bankrupt condition, buying dear and selling cheap; and it is in this way that it has incurred such heavy debts. Should the Hong continue still as before to buy dear and sell cheap, it must needs be to its own hurt as well as to the ruin of the trade of all our Hongs. In that case, when our Consoo holds back its chops for goods, so as to prevent the Hong sending cargo down, you must not, Gentlemen, in that case, talk of bringing accusations against us for hindering the Hong from embarking cargo.

"In the next place, in your future commercial intercourse with the Teenpoo Hong, you must positively require Cash payments for your imports before you deliver them; and you must not lend the Hong any money: because it has very considerable debts to natives, and public claims upon it; and it is to be feared, that it may drag aside your money to pay its private debts or public claims, and thus may incur further debts to you. From the time of our giving you this notice, should any new debts be incurred, we cannot undertake the payment of them, even though the Hong should fail.

"In the third place, Young Kingqur, the fifth brother, formerly carried on a rotten business in the Hong, and swallowed up no small portion of the Hong's means. A former Chief of the Company told old Kingqua that he should not allow this person to carry on business in the Hong. And we now advertise you, Gentlemen, that hereafter you ought on no account to do any business with Young Kingqua, the fifth Brother: for if you do business with him, it will cause the ruin of the Hong.'

"We beg you to have this printed in the Newspapers, for general information. And with this prayer, and compliments, we remain, &c.

(Signed by ten Hong-merchants)

To the Gentlemen
of the General Chamber of Commerce.

(True Translation) J. ROBT. MORRISON.
Chinese Secretary & Interpreter to the Superintendents of British Trade in China.

The following is the Hoppo's reply to Mr. Layton's letter to him which we published last week. As is usual with the Chinese authorities, the Hoppo avoids all direct answer to the points complained of, and contents himself with railing at foreigners, hongmerchants, and traitorous natives. We hope, however, that the inconvenience of this correspondence will have caused the Hoppo to give orders to his people that foreigners be not in future molested as Mr. Layton was, which was altogether against the laws frequently published by the Chinese authorities themselves, where it is expressely said that Government cruizers are not to molest boats by searching them, but, if they are suspected of smuggling, to follow them to the next Custom house station, there to be subject to search by the proper officers. In Mr. Layton's case the Custom house in front of the Factories was the proper place for the Hoppo's men to insist, if they were so inclined, on an examination, but in the instance in question, annoyance seems to be all they aimed at, or bravado to shew how well they could attack a small boat within view of the Imperial army which at that moment was exercising just opposite to where this affair occurred.

Yu, by Imperial appointment Superintendent of Maritime Customs in the province of Kwangtung, &c., &c., issues these commands to the Hong merchants, and requires them to inform themselves regarding them.

They, the said merchants, have laid before me a foreign address, written in Chinese, from the foreign merchant Layton, of the following tenor:—

(here follows the letter as published in our last.—)

This appearing before me, I have given attention to the subject. The said foreigners, on coming from Macao to Canton, had received a permit and special passport, and should have gone to the Western Fort station to present them for examination, for this is the established rule. But the said foreigner Layton, having reached Canton on the 4th instant, did not at all go to the station or to the revenue boat to be examined; but passed by the station, and straitway carried boxes and bundles on shore. Nor was it until the 9th that a linguist took the permit and special passport to the Western Fort station, to be examined. These circumstances show plainly, and beyond the possibility of contradiction, that there was some illegality existing. When, moreover, I had commanded the Hong merchants to examine the matter to the bottom, and to render me a clear and precise report, the said foreigners, Layton and his companions, should have respectfully waited until the matter had been thoroughly investigated. Instead of which, they again hastily renewed their representations, using made-up and propless stories, with unseemly and violent language, hoping to din me into bearing them. Such irregular and unrestrained conduct shows an extreme degree of perversity and error.

I am led therefore to issue these commands. Upon their reaching the said Hong merchants, let them immediately act in accordance with the tenor of my previous order, and instantly ascertain, why the said foreigners, Layton, &c., did not submit to examination, but at once, overleaping the station, proceeded to their hongs,—and what were the contents of the boxes and bundles which they carried on shore. Let them also make strict and careful investigation, whether there be not a traitorous Chinese egging them on. Let them speedily report in order that I may thoroughly arrange the matter. Let them not crafily leave an opening for further disputation. The conduct of foreign affairs is the special duty of the said Hong merchants. If then they connive at or shelter what is wrong, or trifle with it and delay to report, they will assuredly draw on themselves investigation, without indulgence. Hasten. Hasten.—A special order.

MILITARY VALOUR OF THE CHINESE.—Not long since a foreign boat, with only three hands, a European and two lascars, attempted to pass the bogue with a considerable quantity of Opium on board. On coming opposite the Bogue, the mandarin boats pushed off, and informed the commander of the boat that he would not be allowed to pass, unless he submitted to be searched. It being daylight then, the schooner was obliged to turn back, and was afterwards baffled in a second attempt to pass the forts. But night having come on, though the wind was very light, her commander made a third attempt, and was making head way past the forts with the help of oars when two well manned Mandarin boats opposed him, and made an attempt to board, which he repelled by firing a gun loaded with small shot into one of them, which, not liking such salute, immediately went away. The commander then lashed the other mandarin boat to his own, went on board, and there, with a lighted segar, fired off in succession such guns as he found loaded, and then proceeded on his way with the mandarin boat in tow until he was without the range of the guns of the forts, which, whilst thus accompanied, could not fire upon the bold foreigner from fear of hurting their own friends. Thus, one European only, by shewing a considerable degree of courage and conduct (worthy of a better cause) made good a passage through the bogue, in spite of the Imperial navy and the much boasted of fortifications of that pass.

The Tungcheong Hong.

A Respectful Address.

Having come to Canton for commercial purposes, we found that the regulations allowed us to transact business with none but the Hong merchants. We sold our goods to the Tungcheong Hong, judging him from all appearances to be in secure circumstances; but he is now indebted to us upwards of 40,000 dollars which we find he is unable to pay.

It is out of the power of foreigners to obtain information regarding the internal affairs of this country, and of the proceedings and dealings of the Hong merchants with their own countrymen, but as they are specially appointed by the Government to conduct the foreign trade, we are induced to place every confidence in their stability and honor.

In the present instance Wang Lavupan otherwise called Wang Chinkaou was a partner in the Hong and his known opulence was the occasion of our confidence.

Under these circumstances we have to request that your Excellency will be pleased to order an early payment by the Cohong in such manner as your Excellency may deem fit.

We have the honor to be,
Your Excellency's
Most obedient and humble Servants.

Canton, 5th October, 1838.

Signed by Parsee merchants.

Reply to the Governor.

TANG, Governor of the provinces Kwangtung and Kwangse, &c., &c., issues these orders to the Senior Hong-merchants, requiring them to inform themselves fully thereof.

On the 8th of October, 1838, the foreign merchants Dadabhoy and others presented an address of the following tenor:

This having come before me, accompanied with a separate address in foreign writing, which, when I had sent it to the Hong-merchants to translate, proved to be in the main of the same tenor, I examined into the subject. For the Hong-merchants to become indebted, without due guarantee, both to natives and to foreigners, is, I find, a thing of common occurrence. But though these foreigners had placed a considerable degree of confidence in the Hong Tungcheong, and had engaged in mutual commercial transactions with the Hong, they should yet have settled their accounts from time to time, and so have facilitated the arrangement of affairs. How is it that they have waited till these debts have accumulated to more than 40,000 Taels, before they have come forward to seek for the recovery of them! In this they have certainly been the authors of their own involvements.

Moreover the merchant who conducted the affairs of the Hong Tungcheong is Lo Futai, who, on separate grounds, has already been removed. Whether or not the Hong formerly had a mercantile partner of the name of Wang Chinkao, does not appear from any evidence brought forward. Granting, however, that Wang Chinkao's alleged partnership was true, it must nevertheless rest with Lo Futai to arrange with him as to his share in the payment of debts. How can these foreigners make such partnership a pretext for coming before my bar with vexatious complaints!

When, upon the representation of the foreigner, Heerjeebhoy, regarding a debt owing by the said Hong to him, I gave directions that Wang Chinkao should appear at Canton to bring the matter to a clear settlement, it was because Wang Chinkao had signed a note promising to pay the debt. But how can this be a precedent for a similar measure in cases where no such thing exists!

The prayer of this address is in a high degree erroneous. I am led to issue the following commands. When they reach the said Senior Hong merchants, let these immediately proceed to act in obedience to them. Let them ascertain clearly what is the amount of the debts that have formerly been incurred by the now retired merchant Lo Futai to the foreigners Dadabhoy and others, for goods; and what measures should be adapted for their repayment. Let them make haste to render me a report for my investigation. Let no pretexts for delay be admitted, lest apprehension and compulsory means for recovery be the consequence. At the same time let them enjoin these commands on the said foreigners, that they may obey them. Let there be no opposition. These are my commands.

The Waterwitch, from Calcutta 10th September, has arrived, with the July overland mail, bringing London dates to the 7th only. As yet only a few letters that were forwarded by an outside fast-boat have reached Canton—no papers have yet been received—we have consequently no political news to report, except that we see it mentioned that the Queen's coronation has taken place. The commercial accounts, we are sorry to say, are by no means favorable to the China trade, Tea having at the late London sale gone off very heavily and at lower prices than the previous quarterly sale. To judge from the deliveries from 1st of January to the 30th June, we might draw the very unwelcome inference, which, however, in the absence of the necessary explanation, may prove incorrect, that the consumption of Tea is decreasing. The importations into London in the above mentioned period were 16,404,695 lbs; the deliveries, 33,528,172 lbs. stock on hand in London on the 30th June, 46,887,274 lbs. Of the deliveries there were exported, 474,262 lbs. and sent coastwise, 1,646,335 lbs, leaving a balance for home consumption for the first half year of only 11,407,575 lbs.

It is a fortunate circumstance for exporters that these news have reached China before the Teashipping season has opened, as they must no doubt tend to depress prices here, and place shippers on a less unfavorable footing. So long however as the Company's Finance Committee offers Cash, the Chinese, rather than allow prices to fall, as they in reason ought according to the fluctuations of the home-markets, will avail themselves of the Company's advances, to keep prices at an artificial height.

The accounts of the silk-market are less unfavorable, prices having rather improved.

NAUTICAL SUPERSTITION.—We have said that the belief of supernatural vengeance is apparent in most sea-tales, but in none is it more so than in the notion yet strongly prevalent respecting the loss of the Association, with the gallant Sir Cloudesly Shovel, his two sons in-law, his officers, and all his crew on the rocks off Scilly, in 1708. The tradition is, that while riding at Gibraltar, one of his ship's company fell under the penalty of death by the sentence of a Court-martial, but that some points of evidence being highly favourable to the prisoner, he was warmly recommended to mercy by his judges. The appeal was in vain, for the obdurate Admiral ordered this sentence to be carried into effect, and that instanter, in presence of all the fleet. As the last request of a dying man, the culprit beseeched permission for a psalm to be read previous to his execution; which, being granted, he selected the 109th, so remarkable for its maledictive tenor. The moment this was concluded, he cried out, with a loud voice, "Sir Cloudesly, you are murdering a guiltless victim. May the Lord, whom I invoke, as a proof of my innocence to all ages, never allow another officer of your crew, return home alive!" The further denouncement, if any more were intended, was suddenly cut short by the denouncer's being run up to the foreyard-arm.

Such is the story which we can aver to having repeatedly heard, and generally with the peroration —"So the ship wrecked with all hands, and we've never had an Admiral of that 'ere name since;" which last, by the way, is no great marvel. Nor did the miracle cease with the death of the brave officer, for his body floated from the Gilston, the rock on which the fated Association struck, as far as Porthelik, a deep cove on the east side of St. Mary's Island. Here it was found by some fishermen, who depoiled and buried it in a spot, where, to this day, "grass refuseth to flourish, although covering every other part around." At the disinterment which soon afterwards took place, it was found that Porthelik would form a very eligible harbour for men-of-war, and thus, say they, Sir Cloudesle'y body, in going ashore at that very place, had the future benefit of his country in view, by clearing all the reefs and rocks, and pointing out an advantageous port.—United Service Journal.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—There has been less demand for Longcl and were sales attempted lower prices must be submitted to, as some of the principal holders are firm, the market is expec to rally. Good Yarn. is still taken off in small lots, but qu tions are still low, and for the inferior there is little or no enqu With Chintzes, the market is inundated with inferior unsuitable descriptions, but these prevent the sale of the go except at a sacrifice.

Woollens.—The accounts from the interior are said not to be q so favorable and there is besides a good deal of scarcity of mo prevailing here just now. Spanish Stripes and Longcl are therefore both rather dull. Of the former a few hund pieces were sold in the beginning of the week at 1.40, and same could not now be sold at better than 1.35; in Longcl we have heard of no transactions.

Metals.—Lead. is without much alteration in price and dema Iron has declined.

Rice.—If anything, rather lower.

Straits Produce.—Our quotations for both Betelnut and Pepp are rather lower than before.

Cotton.—The Bombay kind may now be quoted as high as the open prices, particularly the finer kinds, and there was some indicat of a still further improvement arising from reports of a par failure of the Nanking Crop; but the demand is less brisk wit this day or two, it is, however, steadily taken off at our quotatio In Bengals there has been a decline of 2 @ 3 mace. VOL. 4. No. 8. Canton, Saturday, 27th October, 1838. No. 164.

Statement of the Chinese Navy.

From a Correspondent.

Leaou tung 6 vessels. Shan tung 24. Keang soo 83. Che keang 96. Fuh keen 342. Kwang tung 166. River navy: Keang nan 250. Keang se 46. Che keang 221. Hoo kwang 127. Kwang tung 392. Total 1753. These are vessels of all sizes, but none carry more than 20 guns, most only 8 or 6. But they are thicker manned than our ships, and we may allow for each on an average about 40 men; the larger vessels often carrying from 2 to 400 sailors and soldiers, which would give about 60,000 mariners as the peace establishment. Allowing for each a tael and a half per month, the lowest wages which a man in the navy can possibly receive, and this would be 1,080,000 per annum. With the pay of the officers at an equal sum, and the building and repairs the whole would amount to 3,240,000, the lowest sum for which this terrible navy, which rules over the four seas, can be maintained.

Kea Ying Chow.

There is in the eastern nook of this province towards the frontiers of Keangse, a district called Kea ying chow, which on many accounts is a most remarkable spot. Like all the territory of the Celestial Empire, it is under the benign influence of Imperial compassion, but it seems there to be of little avail. For if you traverse the district you will observe, that nothing will thrive there but man, with which commodity, however, the land is richly supplied, and in the same ratio as it wants all others. Whither soever your eye reaches, there is one barren chain of rugged mountains, with not a shrub or blade of grass to relieve the sight. You may occasionally perceive a poor peasant perched on one of the terraces, where he obtains a subsistence, in the same manner as a goat. But then he is also equally lean and hungry, and has all the comfort of roving over the hills just to pick up a little stunted grass to serve as fuel. As we may feast upon such scenery daily, whether in the provincial city, or in the celebrated borough Macao, I shall no longer dwell upon the description, hoping that the reader will supply the defect by his own rich imagery. For the sake of variety however let us descend into the valleys, and there we shall certainly be surprized at the humming beehive of men who strike our eyes and ears most forcibly, for they are too many and as numerous as a swarm of grass hoppers. Of this however we might in our own neighbourhood find places to equal the said valleys, and there is certainly no want of the human species in our metropolis, so that even a few can be spared for the few boats in the river. We must therefore be out with our secret, and tell the benevolent reader, that this anthill has entirely abandoned the idea of living upon its own resourses, and therefore seeks in other regions and with other less stirring folks the means of prolonging existence. Nor let it be thought that this is an extraordinary thing in the southern parts of China; but we defy any body to bring forward an other small place, which has sent forth an equal number of Colonists. To make a beginning with Formosa, where this race has monopolized the greater part of the Interior. You would imagine to be in an other Kea ying foo, for the number of inhabitants can not be much less, than in the mother country itself. There is however this one difference, our poor Ka yin (such is the name which they apply to themselves) is rewarded for his labour by the fruits which the earth yields abundantly. He has therefore little temptation to return home, but some members of a clan are annually deputed to carry the hard earned wages to the distant relations, and to bring back with them another swarm of needy adventurers, who would otherwise starve. Then you may see whole caravans of thick set and rather little men, chatting a dialect resembling the Mandarin, abounding in sounds like Sze-tsze, so as to defy any sinologue to understand them. They are most patient and forbearing, quarrel seldom, and so much careworn by want and misery, that the smallest trifle will satisfy them, in fact, they seek nothing, but to be just above extreme want. But we need not to go as far as Formosa; look about you at Canton in the barber, shops or pry into a smithy; and then ask the busy little man what country man he is, and he will tell you Ka-yin. If he however confined his abode merely to the capital of his province, we should give him little credit for his spreading qualities, but you may find him almost every where in Eastern China performing menial offices in regard to which the natives harbour sovereign contempt. If you happen to come to an island or a shore where all is rock, and there is neither entertainment for man or beast, you will find in some corner a hamlet of Ka yin who appear the have learnt to plough granite. Let us trace them farther. If you will take the trouble to go to Banka and enter the tin mines, or inquire who drags the heavy carts over the bristling hills, and you will again hear that it is the Ka yin. To the most wonderful spot we have not yet come; Borneo is the island, where this industrious race exhibits all its ingenuity. Advancing a few days journey from Pontianak into the interior, you will arrive at the Republic of the Ka yin. We had never yet given the Flowry so much credit, that he was able to divest himself from all the ideas of despotism, so as to establish a free state, but we have been credibly informed by a late member of that Government itself, that this is really the case. At Talaluk there lives a number of wealthy Ka yin, rather a great curiosity, for poverty is an inseparable attribute of a Ka yin, with some Chaou-chow men, who consider themselves quite independent from every government of the world. Since there are however about 55,000 of their countrymen more, who entertain the same ideas of liberty, they have considered it their duty to preserve such high principles. For this purpose the electors assemble every fourth mouth and chose from amongst their number from forteen to twenty members, who exercise for that time a sovereign control over life and death, and punish every crime with unrelenting impartiality. Even theft of some articles is expiated with instant death and no forbearance is shown. If these great men, who are denominated Kongsee believe with propriety, their rule may be extended to the space of one whole year, but not above it. If any of the colonists however might think differently upon the subject and withdraw himself from such equitable administration, he is deprived of his goods and chattels and robbed of his liberty, he being viewed in the light of a minor, who has no proper idea of things in general. To defray the expences of the republic, opium, gambling, with sundry other things are farmed out, and there is not only sufficient to maintain all officers, but also a considerable surplus. But nothing in this world being perfect, it so happens, that these liberal gentlemen are rather insolent and occasionally, whether justly or unjustly, get the odious name of tyrants. There is one consolation, their government is ephemeral, and, there being so many rulers, some opposition is invariably raised against all arbitrary proceeding. One complaint however we ought not to omit here, to be a faithful historiographer of the Chinese Republic, viz, that the Kangsee have a particular wish to monopolize every article which yields great profit. Thus it happens, that gold dust is exclusively searched after by their own people. These restrictions however have been the cause of mutiny, which they had to put down with a high hand. Once or twice the Kangsee have declared war against the Dutch. We happened to know an officer who fought against the desperate forces of this republic. From him we learnt that the cries of the warriors were quite appalling, and that this, added to the loud peal of the gong, was sufficient to shake the very earth. Yet on firing some shots they wheeled round with terrible yells, and the whole formidable host was no longer heard of. Once at night, however, they recovered from their panic, and with silent steps advanced to the very walls of the fort. On approaching nearer and nearer, they met with some obstacle, which could not be distinguished in the depth of darkness, and fearing that it was some redoubt or chevaux defrize, they set fire to it, and returned with flying colors. Whilst boasting of their great exploit to their countrymen, the garrison of the fort finally turned out, unconscious of the danger they had been exposed to during the night, and, when looking down the steep walls, they observed to their great consternation that a henroost had actually been burnt down to the ground, and that the feathered inmates had either fled or lost their lives in the all devouring flames. To those who expected to regale themselves upon an excellent fowl curry at breakfast, these were news which spread general dismay amongst the officers. After such heroism it would have been disgraceful to prolong the misery of bloodshed and war, and as people cannot always fight, both parties agreed to conclude peace. This wise measure has redounded to the advantage of all, the Dutch levy duties, the Chinese trade and ransack the rich soil of Borneo, for gold and diamonds, whilst they produce a variety of articles for the Chinese market. Four junks arrived in the harbour this year to carry away the gold dust, which we are informed does not exceed annually three peculs, and to import large numbers of newcomers to supply the place of those who die or return to their own country. The Malay Rajah in the neighbourhood is the protector of the republic, and receives some catty of gold annually in acknowledgment of his good services.

Thus we have faithfully recorded what we know about Kea yin chow and its prolific offspring, and if the reader is not tired with our long disquisition, we intend to give in another number some notices about a district which adjoins the former.

Opium.

Circular.

The accompanying draft is submitted, with due deference to the Foreign Residents. It does not aim to state and press all the grievances of the trade, but is confined to such prominent points, as may, without violence, be connected with the Opium question. By identifying foreign petitions with great domestic concerns, it is hoped they will receive a consideration denied to them, on their own merits, and that such relief will be granted from the interests of the Government as would not be conceded to the most pressing instances. That this end may not be prejudiced, by a suspicion that this memorial covers designs to extend the traffic in the drug, the views of its signers on that point, are stated in limine. In the measures actually recommended, such as, the reference to authorised negotiators, the removal of restrictions and export duties, the introduction of a bonding system, &c., &c., it is hoped that the residents will concur unanimously. Under these views, the Draft is submitted to the residents individually, without distinction of station, or country.

To his Excellency Tang, Governor General of the two Quang Provinces &c., &c.

A respectful memorial of the undersigned Foreigners, resident at Canton, concerning certain measures for preventing the traffic in Opium, the extraction of silver, and the demoralisation of the Chinese people.

When the undersigned first came to Canton several years ago, they found the Opium trade, a large branch of foreign commerce.

They then learned, that it began to be brought in large quantities about the 33d year of Keenlung (A. D. 1767); that it was introduced under a duty until the 5th year of Keaking (A. D. 1800) and that, notwithstanding the prohibition then laid on it, the import has ever since been increasing. They now understand that it exceeds 30 000 (?) chests per annum, and that it is impossible to fix with any certainty, bounds for its production abroad, or for its consumption in the central kingdom.

They are moreover informed that the traffic is now engaging the anxious attention of the Government and that measures are already proposed for its prevention, which involve great changes in the conduct of the foreign trade, and deeply affect, by implication, their own interests. They therefore feel authorised and bound by duty to their absent constituents, to lay their views and their petitions before your excellency.

Your memorialists will state, first, their views of the traffic in question, and ask, secondly, for the adoption of certain measures, instead of those said to be already under your Excellency's consideration.

Of all the productions of the earth, which the creator has assigned to different soils and climes, none are without right and excellent uses. The Opium, which is fatal to the mind and body when used as a means of mere gratification, is extremely valuable as a medicine. Were the Opium brought from abroad thus used in your Empire, your memorialists would rejoice in its extensive use, and engage themselves with alacrity in the business of importing it. But it is the testimony of the natives, with whom we have intercourse, that there is ample Opium grown in China, for medicinal purposes, and that the whole import from abroad must be regarded as going to supply a demand for vicious gratification. Now the object of commerce is to increase the comfort and happiness of all men, by giting to all, the good and pleasant productions scattered over the whole earth, and not to spread corruption and wretchedness. Such being the proper ends of mercantile exchanges, and such the unhappy results of the use of the drug in China, your memorialists feel bound to refrain from the trade themselves, and to dissuade all within their influence from engaging in it.

Again, in their own countries, the undersigned haveever been accustomed to attach great importance to obedience to the lawful Government. They read, in youth, in the books of the western "Shing-jin." Render to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor. Fear God; Honor the King" &c. &c. The infraction of the law was thus coupled in their minds, with offence to God; with loss of honor and peace; as well as civil penalties. Leaving their own lands and placing themselves within your jurisdiction, they contracted toward your Government a civil obligation. They own their indebtedness for the protection hitherto afforded by it to their lives and properties. It may be, they have infringed your laws, in as much as they are not furnished with copies of the Imperial regulations either in their own, or the Chinese language. With the latter, they are very imperfectly acquainted, and the Hong merchants and Linguists, who are the authorised interpreters, are for the like reason, unable to explain them with any precision. The Imperial will is thus left obscure, and it becomes questionable whether the regulations, as explained, are binding or not binding. With the definition of right, the just reverence for the enacting authority is lost also, and men are tempted and liable to the commission of many irregularities. But while this uncertainty rests on many other points of duty, your memorialists are not without clear information, that the traffic in Opium is prohibited by the supreme authority. The Imperial will on this head, being thus clearly and constitutionally expressed, the undersigned abstain from all participation in the Opium traffic.

Again. It is the interest of all nations to be in amity with each other. In order to this, it is necessary that they respect and trust each other. This mutual confidence is brought about by pure and beneficial intercourse. Looking over the Annals of Intercourse between the West and the East, your memorialists see with regret that it has not been of this character. Especially, the early adventurers to China were men of rude, impetuous, and warlike tempers. These and other offensive qualities awakened distrust and aversion. Restrictive regulations succeeded, and the two great branches of the human family, in the West and the East, became estranged from each other. No Chinese of any intelligence visited the West; western men were forbidden to mingle with the race of Han, and thus, the same sentiments have come down to the present time, unmitigated. Your memorialists did hope that the lapse of years would wear away these misapprehensions, but they now see with pain that the Opium traffic has awakened a new the antipathies, that might else have been forgotten. They behold the traffic appealed to as proof that the foreigners are now, as they were of old, crafty, gainseeking, and unscrupulous. They even learn that the councillors of the Emperor believe, that the drug is imported expressly to weaken the Empire by corrupting the people, and thus to pave the way for its conquest and their enslavement. Seeing that the import of the drug is the occasion of so injurious misapprehensions, and knowing that it is a duty to sacrifice selfish interests to the public good, your memorialists forego with cheerfulness the profits of the Opium traffic.

Again. The Shing-jin of the West lay the foundation of our duty toward our fellow men, in benevolence. As Confucius said "A good man perfects other mens virtues and not their vices, a bad man reverses this." Now, in times past, the foreign merchants, not being permitted to enter the interior, did not know how the Opium they brought was used, or whether their agency, in selling it, was useful or injurious. But now the unanimous testimony of the natives of the Empire has cleared up this point, and the introduction of Opium is seen to be noxious. Your memorialists see that the traffic is in opposition to the universal principles of duty and excellence, and as they would escape condemnation before God and before men, they abstain from all connexion with it.

These explanations premised, the undersigned proceed to state the measures, they pray may be adopted, instead of the harsh regulations reported to have been laid before his majesty, and now to be under your Excellency's consideration.

Your memorialists bear with much satisfaction, that the foreign trade is admitted to be so closely identified with the industry of the maritime provinces, that a paternal Government will not entertain a proposition to prohibit it. Indeed, the Opium excepted, the trade is clearly beneficial. It is a fair exchange of the Rice of Manila and Java, the Camlets of Holland, the Furs and Ginseng of America, the cloths of England, the Quicksilver and Lead of Spain, the Spelter of Germany &c., for the Tea, Silk and Rhubarb of the middle Empire. Such being the nature of the general trade and such the Imperial favor toward it, your memorialists pray with confidence that it be protected from all injury by implication with the Opium traffic. Your Excellency is aware that this has not been the case in time past: for instance: The Foreign ships, on their arrival within the Chinese waters, were used to anchor at Lintin and Cumsingmoon, while waiting pilots. But it appearing that the Opium ships were used to anchor on the same grounds also, forts were built at the entrance of the Cumsingmoon, and orders issued to drive all foreign vessels from Lintin, thus exposing all a like to loss of time and shelter. Moreover, contemplating the injurious effects of the drug, your Government has been led to under-rate the worth of international exchanges, and to reject all propositions to facilitate and extend them. When private merchants have presented their petitions, praying for amelioration in the existing regulations your Government has treated them as the requests of men greedy of gain, and regardless alike of equity and of modesty. When public representatives have come to watch over the conduct of their countrymen, alarm has been taken, and they have been received with distrust and hostillity, as if they did but bring a force still more formidable, to the execution of purposes equally offensive. And now, the undersigned are told, that these sentiments are shared by the highest officers of the state, that new restrictions are proposed to be laid on the whole trade, and that their Governments are charged with befriending the Opium traffic and using it as an instrument of undermining the independence of this Empire. They therefore pray that the Opium traffic and the general trade be no longer identified. They pray that the former be no longer assumed as a standard whereby to estimate the feelings of Western men and the designs of Western nations, towards China. And for your fuller satisfaction respecting these, they request that their Governments be invited to send each an envoy, to treat on the national intercourse. Such a negotiation took place, five years ago, between the King of Siam and the envoy of the United States of America. The King required that no Opium be introduced into his dominions. The envoy yielded to the demand; the President of United States approved it; the Senate of the United States ratified it; it is now the law of intercourse between the two countries. Should the samelaw be established between our Governments respectively, and full stipulations agreed on for the traffic on the maritime frontier, the restrictions now proposed would be unnecessary; the character and designs of Western nations cleared from suspicion; the responsibility of the officers of the Empire lightened, and their fears dissipated.

The undersigned proceed to make their representation and their petitions concerning the means of preventing the Extraction of the sycee silver. This extraction is the necessary result of a state of trade with foreign nations, wherein the imports exceed the exports. Formerly the Tea and Silk of the middle Kingdom far exceeded the merchandise introduced, and there was a large annual balance due the Chinese merchants, which was paid in silver. Of late, the rapid increase of Opium has reversed this balance, and augmented it until it amounts to $ 9,000,000, per annum. Could the import of the drug be stopped, an amount equally great would be annually exported, as it was formerly. But the Opium-traffic has grown up under prohibitions, and it would therefore appear, that the vast coast of China cannot be so effectually guarded as to prevent the entrance of the drug or the escape of the Silver. Two expedients remain for reducing the balance of silver,—the lessening the value of foreign goods imported, and the augmentation of the domestic exports. The undersigned understand that the former expedient is already under your Excellency's consideration. They therefore hasten to represent, that it is unjust that the maritime provinces should be deprived of articles of long continued and excellent use, in order to remedy evils that have grown out of the sudden increase in the demand for Opium. Moreover, were the import of goods prohibited, the foreign producer would be disabled from purchasing the productions of the maritime provinces, a deep injury would be inflicted on their industry, and they, though innocent, be made to suffer for the guilty. Neither would the silver brought with one hand, be secured from being taken away with the other. Your memorialists therefore pray that the latter expedient be adopted, and every facility be given to enlarged exportations. On this point, they represent, that the present articles of large export, tea excepted, are not peculiar to China; The silks of France and Italy, the Rhubarb of Turkey, the Cassia of Ceylon, the Porcelain of England and Germany &c., are far superior in quality to those of the central Empire These articles are exported hence for the use of the poorer classes, and their consumption abroad depends on their being afforded cheaper than those of the west can be. Many of these come from the interior far from the provincial city, and all pay an export duty. To the end that their exportation may be increased, and the drain on the Sycee silver diminished, your memorialists pray therefore that the duties outward be taken off, and the foreign ships permitted to receive each article at the port nearest its place of growth and manufacture, so as to avoid the charges incident on long inland transportation. To enforce this petition, they represent that the culture of silk is rapidly increasing in Europe and America and that the teaplant is found to abound in India. Already, the intenague, the nankeens, the crapes &c. once largely called for, are now no longer exported. There is therefore reason to apprehend, that if measures be not taken to afford the staples of China as cheaply as possible, those of other countries will supplant them, the export hence decline, and the call for specie increase continually. The undersigned further represent, that under your present regulations, goods which have been introduced and paid the import duty, are, if found unsaleable and exported again, charged a second time with an outward duty The reexportation of foreign metals is entirely prohibited This system produces two evils, viz. the extensive storage of goods at Lintin, and the increase of the annual balance payable in silver. These evils are not however necessary. All governments of civilized nations recognise that the merchant cannot foreknow what goods will find a profitable sale, especially when sent to very remote countries. When he lands his goods at a foreign port, and cannot sell them without loss, he is permitted to take them away again, without paying either inward or outward duties. This is a wise and just system. Your memorialists therefore pray that it be introduced in China, so that the merchants may no longer be reluctantly driven to keep storage ships at Lintin, and so that the annual drain on the sycee silver may be lessened.

Your memorialists proceed to the measures to be adopted for preventing the corruption of morals resulting from the Opium-traffic. They concur entirely in the sentiments of Confucius, that "the prosperity of a nation depends on equity, not on riches", that "virtue is the root, revenue the branches", that "the good prince first pays serious attention to the virtue of his people."

They are willing to believe, it was in accordance with these maxims, that his majesty's ancestor in the 5th year of his reign, prohibited the further import of Opium. They ascribe the late rejection of a proposition to legalise the introduction, to the same virtuous care for the welfare of the people. They doubt not the same sentiments will be applied to the selection between the several sets of measures now under consideration. Meanttime, they make the following representation.

In times past, the Governments of the West have often attempted to control the tastes of their people, by high duties, prohibitions &c. The impossibility of guarding extensive frontiers, and the unfaithfulness of inferior officers, have made these efforts ineffectual They have therefore turned from official prohibitions to other safeguards of public morals—such as,—the extensive provision of innocent pleasures, the public exposure of good and evil conduct, and the diffusion of religious instruction. These are wise and just alternatives. Every where and in all times, the heart of man longs for excitements and recreations. If innocent ones be not within reach, the heart seizes on such as are vicious. It is important, therefore, that all men have at command means of innocent pleasure. Hence the Western Governments favor their subjects in their commerce, because the pleasant things of the whole earth are thus gathered and brought home to their people. Thus they see them, with satisfaction, resorting to China for its tea, since the use of this will, in some degree, take the place of noxious beverages Your memorialists therefore pray that this example be imitated; that both natives and foreigners be encouraged to bring all articles of commerce to all the maritime provinces, in order that other things less noxious may take the place of Opium. Now, while the foreign trade is confined to Canton, and natives are forbidden to visit other countries, the drug being already known, and easily conveyed, and used in secret, finds its way to all parts of the Empire, but all bulky products from abroad are shut out, or do not penetrate beyond the immediate vicinity of the provincial city.

Again, the undersigned represent that it is the experience of Western men that vice flourishes in darkness, and when brought forth to the view of the virtuous, it withers. Hence in the west, publicity is given to all the sentiments and conduct of the people. In cities and towns and hamlets, newspapers and societies of good men are established, all places are made accessible by roads, and travel, all things are publickly investigated, so that no dark place may be left, where vice may hide itself. Your memorialists therefore pray, that the same freedom of inquiry and facilities for intercourse be cultivated in China: that the evils resulting from the use of the drug, in particular, may be brought to light in every city and hamlet, and all good men united in its suppression, Again, the undersigned represent the necessity of furnishing the minds of the people with the motives and restraints of religion. They see, with pleasure, that a close correspondence exists between the precepts of the Eastern and Western Shing-jin, as to the common moral duties. (Some specimens of this coincidence are enclosed for your Excellency's in spection). But there, the parallel terminates, for Confucius spoke not of the future state of existence. Not so the Western Shing-jin." They reveal from God to men, a world to come, where the virtuous shall rise to a life, intellectual, happy and immortal, while the wicked shall sink to endless shame and ignorance and misery. Thus they afford stronger than earthly motives to resist temptations to vice, and to follow through this short life the paths of virtue. These pure motives have hitherto been unfelt by the people of China. Living without the knowledge of any better state of existence, the reward of virtue beyond the grave, they have sunk under the solicitations of present pleasure. Hence their weakness before the Opium pipe. Hence their ruin. The precepts of the sages have not saved the imperial servants from the fatal fascination. The idols of Budha have not protected the common people The whole Empire feels its weakness, and trembles before the prospect of a universal corruption. How shall the dread catastrophe be averted? Where shall an agent be found competent to stay the march of evil? Your memorialists pray that it sought, in the West; in the writings of our holy men; in the help of the God they reveal; in the hope of heaven.

Here the undersigned close their memorial. They have not ventured, in its progress, to utter any petition that the introduction of the drug be legalized. They have refrained from this, because they fear, the legalisation would be mistaken by the people, as evidence of a lowered morality in their rulers, and as giving an official sanction to the worst of their vices. They fear too, that an immediate legalisation would expose the native, still more dangerously, to a foreign fascination, while yet unfurnished with any foreign aids and encouragements to virtue. Still they are convinced that mere prohibitions are futile. And when the prayers of this memorial shall have been granted, and the native shall have been furnished with the motives and restraints, that raise the foreigner above the temptation he presents, then, they will further pray that all interdicts be removed, and the smoker left to his choice and its consequences.

Cruize of H.'s Ship Larne, in search of the Antonio Pereira.

H. M.'s Ship Larne, Captain Blake, has returned to Macao, after an absence of nine weeks in search of the Antonio Pereira. The Larne reached Lincoln island, one of the Paracels, shortly after leaving this port, but could discover no traces of a wreck on that shoal. From thence she made several attempts to examine the Bombay shoal, but could not effect it, from the winds and currents she encountered, the latter of which, on two occasions, placed her in a very perilous situation, and she came over a coral patch of 3 fms. S. E. of Lincoln island, supposed to be connected with the line of shoal laid down in the charts, nearly due South of that island. Though the Larne has encountered no severe weather during her cruize, she was much harrassed by light winds and currents in reaching the coast of Cochin China. She arrived in Turon bay on the 27th ulto., where she could not obtain any tidings of the unfortunate Antonio Pereira. Having completed her water, stock, &c., she left that on the 4th instant, with the intention of visiting Galong bay in Hainan, here she had the N. E monsoon, with strong S. W. currents, and after four days ineffectual attempt to beat against it, kept to the Eastward, and on the 11th inst. passed Money's island, the Discovery shoal, and the Passo Keah shoal on her way hither, and arrived yesterday morning.

Dear Sir,

Some months since a letter from a Gentleman in New-Haven was received, relative to the Aurora Borealis and shooting stars. It had been my intention, before this, to invite, through the papers of Canton, the attention of Gentlemen here, and particularly of the commanders of vessels of the fleets of Whampoa and Hongkong, as well as of the several Captains who are visiting the higher latitudes on the Coast of China, to this interesting subject of scientific enquiry. Without further delay, permit me to introduce the subject. The following extract of the above mentioned letter will shew the kind of data desired:

"Professor Olmsted has created much interest about the origin of shooting stars. You would do him a great favor if you would keep watch on the night of the 12th November and morning of the 13th--perhaps it would be well also to look out on the nights of the 11th and 13th--note how fast they fall, and trace back the lines of their direction, and see where they all meet or cross each other.

"Great attention is now being paid to the Aurora Borealis, not only here, but throughout the scientific world. If you would keep a look out, and note the date (with the day of the week) and the hour of the day in meantime when the display is most brilliant, or when the corona or meeting of the streams is formed, also the time when the Aurora was first discovered, and when your observations ceased, the change of the weather immediately after and before, the direction of the wind, etc., you might render an essential benefit to the scientific word, for it is extremely desirable to have observers in different parts of the world. I would say further, with regard to the shooting stars, that it is very important that observations be made on the mornings of the 12th, 13th, and 14th November, from 2 to 3 o'clock until day. The point from which they radiate or at which the lines of their directions meet when traced backward is in the Sickle in the constellation Leo, which rises about 2 o'clock A. M. so that an eastern view is necessary."

As yet I have never witnessed the Aurora Borealis in this place, and several gentlemen, long resident in Canton, have remarked the same. Indeed, I am not aware that it is ever witnessed so near the equator.

Any information relative to the two phenomena, the Aurora and the meteoric showers, which are suspected to have a common cause, addressed either to the Editors of the Canton papers or to the subscriber, will be gratefully received. If within the recollection of navigators now in port similar phenomena have occurred, they are desired to communicate it stating the year and date, Long., and Lat., of the place where they were witnessed.

By inserting the above in your next paper, you will greatly oblige,

Your's very sincerely,

PETER PARKER.

Canton, October 24th, 1838.

Saturday, 27th October.

Though we were enabled last week, by the arrival of the Watterwitch from Calcutta, to notice the receipt of the July mail at Bombay, and to give some intelligence of the state of markets in Europe, the letters themselves and news papers, which are probably on board the Duke of Lancaster have not yet been received. The Watterwitch brings 860 and the Courtjer Family 570 chests of Opium. The total stock in the Company's warehouses on the 8th Sept. was reduced to 630 chests Patna and 370 of Benares, with only 53 of old Patna. There have been some considerable transactions in Calcutta, both in Benares and Patna, without, however, producing much rise in prices, owing to the want of advices. Benares has been sold at 1015 a 1020. and Patna has been disposed of freely at 1030 @ 1085, which prices may be considered the new rates. Money was becoming plentiful.

We have received the Singapore Free Press, of 27th ultimo. (That of the 20th has not come to hand). From it we were happy to learn the safe arrival at Seychelle of Captain Randle of the Ruby, with his boats crew, whence they had safely arrived at Cochin. The statement that one of the Ruby's boats was still missing is erroneous- only two boats left that ship and both have safely arrived. This error arose, no doubt, from a perusal of Captain Randle's letter notifying his arrival at Cochin, in which he speaks of one boat still missing, uninformed as he then was of her having been picked up by the Jupiter. Captain Randle has likewise saved a quantity of gold ex Ruby, which, with that saved in the Long boat, is in value supposed to amount to about a lakh of dollars.

We observe from the Singapore papers that a Light house is to be erected on Baru Island or the Coney, in the Straits of Malaca, and that, to maintain it, the Government intends to levy tonnage dues on the shipping at Singapore. Capt Richards of the Julia in a letter addressed to the Free Press recommends the light to be placed on the Coney, as preferable to Baru Island.

We give in another column a communication we have received from Messrs Olyphant & Co., being in fact a representation addressed by these gentlemen to the Viceroy on the subject of the Opium-trade, and on several other topics connected with the trade in general. Want of room obliges us to offer no other remarks on it for the present, than that we do not think that many of the foreign residents here will concur in the propriety of addressing such a memorial to the Governor, nor do we think it likely to be well received by him, as it must naturally tend to quicken the jealousy already existing against foreigners in the minds of the Chinese officers, they being now told that trade is not the only calling of the merchants trading to Canton but that they also strive to introduce their own manners and religion, which are therein declared to be so far superior to those of the Chinese. However much we may "lay the flattering unction to our soul" that the western nations are vastly superior in education, morals, etc, and however natural it be that we should be prejudiced in favor of our own institutions, it does not follow that the Chinese will concede the point, nor is it likely that by vaunting ourselves to them, they will be induced to look on us with a more favorable eye than they have hitherto done. For these reasons we would call the step of presenting a paper like that under consideration, anything but politic.

Doctor Parker has favored us with a communication concerning the meteors, called commonly shooting stars which have for three successive years been observed to fall on the night of the 12th and morning of the 13th November. We hope that this notice will induce the curious to keep a look out on the night mentioned. Had we room now, we would publish the description of one of these phenomena from the American Journal of science, but are obliged to postpone it to our next. These meteoric showers have lately been seen in great brilliancy near the Sandwich Islands, by the passengers and crew of the Henry Clay on her passage from South America, and we have seen a painting executed by Mr. Bourje', a passenger on board, representing this phenomenon, and, to judge from this, it must have been remarkably beautiful and brilliant.

The communication from a Correspondent, our readers will find to contain an interesting account of the Chinese in Borneo. Our correspondent need not fear that these instructive details will tire his readers.

Dwellings in Canton. We have, on several occasions, complained of the insufficiency of space allotted to the dwelling houses of foreigners in Canton. This evil is growing daily as more strangers arrive, nor is there at the present moment, we believe, a single house unoccupied, whilst many are subdivided among different parties, and rents have risen to an exorbitant rate. What temporary visitors to Canton will do in future to put a roof over their heads we cannot imagine, seeing that one of the two Hotels, which accommodated a great many visitors, is about to be converted into a private dwelling house, whilst the remaining hotel is by no means spacious enough for all visitors that will require to be accommodated. But not only these will find themselves in an awkward position, the number of resident foreigners is constantly encreasing, and we are not far wrong in supposing the houses which, before the Company's charter ceased, sheltered perhaps 60 residents, are now required to do the same for about five times that number. The inconvenience and increase of expense arising therefrom are very great, and it were much to be wished that the Chinese authorities could be prevailed on to allot more ground for foreigners' houses. Hitherto representations to effect this have failed in the desired result, but repeated complaints will probably at last be useful, and we would recommend that such representation be again made, and, if not successful first, be repeated. In this instance the Chinese cannot refuse it on the plea of being contrary to usage, or old custom, since never before, so many strangers, carrying on trade, required to be housed, and towards whom the Chinese authorities are in a position for which there is no precedent but what is favorable to strangers. Besides one of the 13 hongs is inhabited by a security merchant. If the Government will not give us more room, they ought at least protect us so far that that especially allowed to us be not usurped by their own people, and Minqua ought to go to live somewhere else, which we suppose he may do with little inconvenience and some pecuniary advantage to himself. We hope that this subject will have due attention from the foreign community, in order that the evil may be remedied.

No festivals perhaps are more popular among the Chinese than the illuminations which, beginning about the middle of September, are observed to be continued during a month or more, progressing from one street to another. The beginning of these illuminations is, we believe, generally made by the two China Streets, next the Factories. This year they there were very poor, which is to be attributed, probably, to the majority of the shops there not having done a very thriving business. But these streets were soon followed by displays much more brilliant in Physic Street, where the groups of figures, presented at almost every third house suspended over the middle of the street, were exceedingly handsome. These figures generally represent some stage in the "grande passion," and following them from one to the other are somewhat like the scenes in a play, the first probably representing the bashful but devoted lovers; the next, the difficulties they have to encounter, such a angry parents, or jealous rivals; and the last shews them in quiet and contented possession of each other and a home. The figures, are in general, extremely well executed, so much so, indeed, as to leave no doubt on the spectator's mind, as to what they are meant to represent The streets themselves, on such occasions, are one blaze of light: innumerable small oillamps are hung every where, and wherever the width of the street permits it, a kind of temple, apparently built of these lamps, rises, and dazzles the sight by its brilliancy, whilst the numerous quaint devices, such as winged demons, angels with very unangelic countenances, and all kinds of things a Chinese imagination can conceive, are brought out in strong relief. In these narrow streets thus lighted up, an immense multitude moves up and down, jostling each other, for that seems to be the chief amusement of the evening, with the greatest good humor, and crying out Fan-kwy to such of the foreigners whom curiosity may take to the spot, generally, however, making more way for them than they would to their own countrymen, thus evincing some feeling of hospitality.

It is but a few days since that in one of these streets, among the groops of figures spoken of above, there was a family of foreigners—the gentleman, in the act of taking a glass of beer from a black servant standing behind him—and the lady on a chair opposite, looking attentively at a flower presented to her by a small foot-boy. This group was, apparently, much admired by the natives, who, on the approach of a foreigner, would make room, so as to allow him, leisurely, to con the beauties of the sight before him, and then, probably, to institute comparisons as to the merits of the performance. These illuminations or shews last three nights in every place where they are made.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There have been few transactions in Longcloths, during the week, and those, we believe, principally in barter at rather improved prices, and the holders generally appear firmer. Good COTTON YARN. is now enquired for, and some small parcels have been sold—but the highest offers are about $ 36, for assortments averaging about Nos. 28 @ 30.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES. appear to be firmer, and those of good quality would command our highest quotation. LONGELLS, have declined and sales of about 6000 pieces have been made during the week, we hear, at from 8½ @ 8¾, but the Chinese have been selling their previous purchases as low as $ 8, and there are some of inferior manufacture offering, for which hardly $ 6 could be obtained.

METALS.—LEAD. continues low, and IRON is without much demand.

RICE,—even more depressed than before.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER. remains much as before. BETELNUT. has rather advanced, and 3½ could, we think, now be readily obtained, if the importations are not heavy. TIN, in demand, the supply being very small.

COTTON.—The demand has been very moderate during the week, but without any decline in the Bombay kinds. In Bengal and Madras there is no more whatever, but as the reports are still current of a short Nankin crop, holders will not submit, for the present, to lower rates.

OPIUM.—There is more stir in the Opium market, the brokers going about more freely, and the deliveries commencing both at Whampoa and to the westward. Good Malwa is rather more enquired for, but at little advance in price. Some of the holders of new Patna and Benares were disposed to sell in the early part of the week at 585 @ 590, but it has since again recovered, although the demand is slack. The deliveries to the 22d were Patna old 63, new 319; Benares, old 1, new 165; Malwa 1049, Total 1537 Chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—No change.

TEA.—The market remains quiet, the general feeling amongst exporters appearing to be that a settlement at the present moment would be premature. Musters of green teas are beginning to arrive.

Superstition and Astrology.

PEKING, MAY 14, 1818. A HURRICANE AT PEKING.

"Yesterday evening, about three quarters past 6 o'clock, a storm suddenly arose, and proceeding from S. E. crossed the capital. In a moment the whole heavens were darkened, and the whole atmosphere was filled with sand and dust, to such a degree, that objects in houses could not be distinguished without the light of a candle As the Emperor expresses it, (in an Edict which he published,) "it rained dust." To express this idea, there is an appropriate word in the Chinese language Mæ; from which I infer, that such storms have occurred in the regions of the north, at different periods.

I am sorry that my materials do not enable me to give any fuller account of this hurricane, for the satisfaction of the natural philosopher; in as much as I observe from the Philosophical Magazine, that meteorological phenomena are in Europe collected with care."

From the above short notice, which is extracted from the official document referred to, there does not seem to have been any thing very awful about it; yet the Emperor professes that he was excessively alarmed at the extraordinary darkness, and says, "his heart within him trembled for fear." He conceives it a divine judgement, and is anxious to know its meaning: whether the cause be his own mismanagement, or his employing improper men. He seems to have been lately reading some astrological book, for he runs through a long string of evils in a nation, which those books point out, as indicated by extraordinary natural phenomena; and closes by professing his own resolution to examine himself and correct what he finds amiss; and calls upon all his Ministers of State, and subordinate officers to do the same; that the cause which thus disturbs the harmony of the Universe, may be discovered and removed.

He further gives, in a separate document, his Imperial astronomers a severe reprimand for their inattention in not previously informing him, that the hurricane was to take place. He asks them tauntingly—what it is they attend to, when they neglect such extraordinary changes in nature as that of May the 14th. They had but three days before been stating to him, what felicitous stars shed their happy influences around his person, and indicated more and more the duration and felicity of his reign; and which were to grace the auspicious completion of the sexagenary term of years which he has lived. All this he says, was the language of flattery, whilst they really could not, or would not tell what evils were about to happen. This document he closes with a command to them to calculate exactly what heaven indicated by the darkness and the storm; and not, on any account, to conceal it from him.

In a third document, his Majesty's mind is a little eased, by various statements from places at some distance from the capital, where the darkness was not so great, and where at midnight, a heavy rain fell, with thunder. He has dispatched a person to go and discover where the storm at first arose, as he apprehends, that at that point there is some act of oppression, or false imprisonment; which has provoked the wrath of heaven.

Whether the above arose from sincere superstition; or from state hypocrisy; I shall leave your readers, Mr. Editor, to judge for themselves, only saying, that I incline to the first opinion.

Three of the Yu-she, or authorised advisers of the Emperor, have written to him, that in their opinions, the cause of the hurricane was the dismissal of the late Premier Sung Tajih; and suggest the propriety of recalling him.

His Majesty does not approve of their suggestion; but styles it a specious pretext to introduce disorder into the affairs of Government. He again justifies at considerable length his treatment of Sung; and that he by no means felt resentment against him, but on the contrary was obliged to do violence to his feelings, when he dismissed him, and banished him from Court. As to the hurricane being an expression of Heaven's displeasure on Sung's account, it is by no means credible, in as much as it did not happen at the time, but a full year afterwards.

He reprehends in strong terms, the presumption of those three advisers, in thus meddling with the prerogative of the crown, whose alone it is to judge of the fitness of the great Officers of State.

The Mathematical Board, at the head of which is a Tartar nobleman allied to the family on the throne, has also sent up its opinion respecting the hurricane. I use the word hurricane to prevent circumlocution. The Board defines Mae, to be darkness of the atmosphere, accompanied by a descent of dust, during a whole day, or for a shorter period. If it continue a whole day, it indicates perverse behaviour and discordant counsels existing with the Sovereign and his Ministers: it also indicates great drought, and dearness of grain. If the wind blows up the sand, moves the stones, and is accompanied with noise, inundations are to be expected. If the descent of dust continues but for an hour: pestilence may be anticipated in the south-west regions, and half the population will be diseased in the south east. They refer to the astrological work which gives these statements, whilst they decline to add any thing farther of their own.

The Gazette of the same date as the preceding contains a paper, in which his Majesty expresses the painful anxiety which he feels on account of the long drought, by which Pe-che-le province if afflicted. He has sent his sons to fast, to pray, and to offer sacrifice to Heaven, to Earth, and to the god of the wind,—and but only a very slight shower had fallen, and had not at all penetrated the ground. His Majesty, himself wrote a prayer, and appointed the 21st of the month, for himself, his brother, and two others, to go and sacrifice The Emperor was to sacrifice at the altar dedicated to Heaven; his brother, at that dedicated to Earth; the third person was to sacrifice to the divinity that rules the passing year, and the fourth to address his devotions to the god of the wind. The 20th was so be a solemn fast; on the day of sacrifice, the kings, nobles, ministers of state, attending officers, and soldiers and servants, were all to appear in a peculiar cap and upper garment indicating deep contrition.

Whilst the Emperor, and the above-named persons, are offering up their sacrifices, two of his sons are ordered to go and offer incense at two other places.

From the above it appears, that that minds of the highest classes of the community in China are exercised about sin, and providence, and punishment; and that the light which unassisted reason affords them, is by no means such as to render, a divine revelation superfluous.

On the 29th of August, his Majesty will set out for Manchow Tartary, to worship at the tombs of his fathers. He intends to arrive at that place on the 25th of September. Indo Chinese Gleaner.

Siam.

From the Singapore Free Press, September 20.

Siam.—The Ariel and Hero both arrived yesterday morning from Siam. By the latter vessel we have advices to 21st ultimo, at which time the market for imports, especially for Cotton Goods was improving, owing to the small importations by the Bombay Surat vessels and the Junks of the season, all of which had arrived: Common Canbaics were quoted @ 45, and middling @ 50 ticals per corge, and wanted. Maddapollams, 32 @ 35 in, 80 @ 85 and 40 @ 50 in, 100 @ 105 ticals per corge, and also wanted. Long Cloths—36 in, 6 @ 10. and Grey Shirtings, 7 @ 10 ticals per piece, and none in the market. Old English Tower muskets, saleable at 6½. Cotton Twist—Grey Male—75 ticals per picul—saleable.

First quality Sugar was scarce at 8½ ticals, but inferior more plentiful at 7½ @ 8 ticals.

The Catherine, Leitch, was to leave a day or two after the Hero, for Singapore and London.

Our correspondence from Siam also gives some account of an unusual act of severity by the king of Siam towards a Chinese merchant of Bangkok, who had been informed against as dealing in Opium. According to the Siamese laws, no one was to be held liable to punishment for the sale of Opium unless the article were found in his possession; and, relying upon this, the man confessed the charge. But his Majesty regarding the defence as a quibble, forthwith orde ed the man to be put in irons, beside being condemned in an extremely heavy fine, and to be scourged daily until he paid it. He was also called upon to declare from whom he had purchased, and to whom sold, the opium- but the experiment of fetters and flagellation upon the Chinaman had as yet failed in producing the desired effect. If the punishment in the man's case is the first for the offence in question, the King of Siam cannot be applauded for his impartiality or love of Justice—but if it be his intention to expel Opium from his dominions, we would recommend him to tax it to the utmost, instead of rendering either those who sell or those who use it liable to expiate the offence by a severity which threatens life.

Another catastrophe of a very different nature is also alluded to by our correspondent.—It appears that Phra Suria Pak-dee the son of the Praklang Phya See Peepat, a confidential adviser of the King, had been guilty of receiving from the eyes of one of the King's youthful wives "fair speechless message," betokening more love than was consistent with His Majesty's honor should exist between the two, and of repaying these glances in kind. The injured lord of the frail dame received information of the intrigue, and the male culprit was forthwith apprehended. Being a person of consideration, having royal blood in his veins, and his father in high esteem with the king, it was thought that he would undergo no more than the ordinary punishment of flagellation and the exposure of his excoriated back to a scorching sun. But these were only preliminaries, after being subjected to which, he was led to execution, and his head severed from his body at a blow. His fair partner in crime suffered the same fate; but some feeling of delicacy forbade her exposure to the public gaze, and she was taken down to the place of execution in a fine boat, so completely enclosed as to shut her completely out from the view.—When led out to the fatal spot, she was so totally enveloped from head to foot in white cloth, which was not suffered to be removed, that the executioner had to take his aim half by chance through the folds Five men, one of whom was the King's Chamberlain, and the same number of women were executed along with them, on suspicion or proof of their having connived at the amour.

We were yesterday waited upon by a Chinaman of respectable appearance who requested that we would take some notice of the extent to which the species of gambling called Hue Hue is now carried on at this Settlement, productive as it is found to be of the greatest disorder and distress among the families of the Chinese In a former number we gave some account of the manner in which this game is carried on, and the pernicious consequences resulting from indulging in it—leading in many cases to the total ruin of the parties, and not unfrequently to suicide—and the suppression of those haunts where practices so injurious to the welfare of the native community are encouraged, cannot be too soon made an especial object of the attention of our police.—Ibid.

Meteoric Showers. *

I. Phenomena as observed at New Haven, (Lat. 41° 18' N., Lon 72° 58' W.) and published in the New Haven Daily Herald. †

"About day break this morning, our sky presented a remarkable exhibition of Fire Balls, commonly called Shooting Stars. The attention of the writer was first called to the phenomenon about half past five o'clock; ‡ from which time until near sun rise, the appearance of these meteors was striking and splendid, beyond any thing of the kind he has ever witnessed.

To form some idea of the phenomenon, the reader may imagine a constant succession of fire balls, resembling sky rockets, radiating in all directions from a point in the heavens, a few degrees south east of the zenith, and following the arch of the sky towards the horizon. They commenced their progress at different distances from the radiating point, but their directions were uniformly such, that the lines they described, if produced upwards, would all have met in the same part of the heavens. Around this point, or imaginary radiant, was a circular space of several degrees, within which no meteors were observed. The balls, as they travelled down the vault, usually left after them a vivid streak of light, and just before they disappeared exploded, or suddenly resolved themselves into smoke. No report or noise of any kind was observed, although we listened attentively.

Beside the foregoing distinct concretions, or individual bodies, the atmosphere exhibited phosphoric lines, following in the train of minute points, that shot off in the greatest abundance in a northwesterly direction. These did not so fully copy the figure of the sky, but moved in paths more nearly rectilinear, and appeared to be much nearer the spectator than the fire balls The light of their trains also was of a paler hue, not unlike that produced by writing with a stick of phosphoras on the walls of a dark room. The number of these luminous trains increased and diminished alternately, now and then crossing the field of view like snow drifted before the wind, although in fact, their course was towards the wind.

From these two varieties, the spectator was presented with meteors of various sizes and degrees of splendor: some were mere points, but others were larger and brighter than Jupiter or Venus and one, seen by a credible witness before the writer was called was judged to be nearly as large as the moon. The flashes of light, although less intense than lightning, were so bright as to awaken people in their beds. One ball that shot off in the northwest direction, and exploded a little northward of the star Capella, left, just behind the place of explosion, a phosphorescent train of peculiar beauty. This line was at first nearly straight, but it shortly began to contract in length, to dilate in breadth, and to assume the figure of a serpent drawing itself up, until it appeared like a small luminous cloud of vapor. This cloud was borne eastward, (by the wind, as was supposed, which was blowing gently in that direction) opposite to the direction in which the meteor had proceeded, remaining in sight several minutes The light of the meteors was usually white, but was occasionally prismatic with a predominance of blue.

A quarter before six o'clock, it appeared to the company that the point of apparent radiation was moving eastward from the zenith, when it occurred to the writer to mark its place, accurately, among the fixed stars. The point was then seen to be in the constellation Leo, within the bend of the Sickle, a little to the westward of Gamma Leonis. During the hour following, the radiating point remained stationary in the same part of Leo, although the constellation in the mean time, by the diurnal revolution, moved westward to the meridian nearly 15 degrees. §

By referring to a celestial globe, it will be seen that this point has a right ascension of 150 degrees, and a declination of about 21 degrees. Consequently, it was, when on the meridian, 20 degrees 18 minutes south of the zenith.

The weather had sustained a recent change. On the evening of the 11th, a very copious southerly rain fell, and on the 12th, a high westerly wind prevailed, by gusts. Last evening the sky was very serene; a few "falling stars" were observed, but they were not so numerous as to excite particular attention.

The writings of Humbo'dt contain a description of a similar appearance observed by Bonpland, at Cumana, in 1799. It is worthy of remark, that this phenomenon was seen nearly at the same hours of the morning, and on the 12th of November.

Yale College, Nov. 13, 1833."

The Elizabeth, Highat, from China to Liverpool, encountered a severe Typhoon on the 3d of July, which threw her on her broadside, blew away the jib, foresail, and fore and mizen topgallant sails. The sea washed away the lee quarter boat with all her gear, tore off the iron davits from the side, and the lee anchor through the forecastle, carrying away the whole of the upper bulwarks, as far as the centre of the stern, and part of the lower; every thing that would float was washed off deck; ship lying with her lower yards in the water until the gale abated, foretopgallant mast and flying jib-boom were blown away. Men lashed to the helm and pumps; water pumped up being strongly impregnated with the smell of Tea. At 10 P. M., gale veered to South and moderated. During the gale the spoondrift flew in such a constant stream that on one could look to windward Wore to the eastward. Capt. Highat put into Coupang, where he made protest; and, after repairing damages, sailed again for Liverpool on the 18th August.—Canton General Price Current, October 30.

Lincoln Island.—The following is an accurate description of this dangerous islet.—Length 3 miles E. to W. and 2½ miles N. to S., covered with green herbage all over, and appears rather higher in the centre when made in a S. b W. direction. At the distance of four miles it looks very low, raised in the middle, and is very dangerous to approach in the night, as it is most probable a ship would strike before her situation could be discovered from the breaking water. The reef to the S. E. of the [illegible] extends a much greater distance in that direction than laid down by Ross. The Larne [illegible] ing to the S. E. about 5 miles off, [illegible] fms; centre part of the islet then bore [illegible] ne tacked to eastward, and had 2½, 2, 4, 5, 6, and 7 fms., to no bottom, standing out E. N. E. The water is discoloured on the reef. Larne went nearly round the island, and had no soundings at 75 fms. bearing E. S. E. distant 3½ miles. Lat. of centre of the island 16° 30' N. Long. 119° 40' E. The islet is surrounded by reefs, trending to the Northward, Eastward, and Westward, and extending as before observed, to the S. E; probably to the distance of 6 or 7 miles from the S. E. point.—Canton Register, October 30.

Whamponiana.—

BY FUDGE.

It was about noon on the 12th February 183—that the Schooner "Morpheus" entered the Bogue Channel. The wind which had been blowing fresh from the Southward, suddenly veered round to W. and in a furious gust the schooner was thrown on her beam ends. "Luff," shouted a voice from below, "luff and be d——d to you!" and forthwith emerged from the cabin a head and shoulders, the property of the chaste orator, whose voice had just before been heard. The tindal, had meantime let every thing down by the run, and the Morphine righted. The head having taken a look to windward, another aloft, and a third, of mingled ferocity and contempt, at poor Hassan, who exhibited the most unequivocal signs of horror, the voice was again heard, glancing in a most ungentlemanly manner at the canine parentage, and sanguinary eyes of his victim, and combining in the same breath, certain little condemnatory epithets respecting his, the speaker's, soul, and its future residence, with "God forgive me." The Head &c. having been withdrawn to the cabin, I shall there introduce its owner and his companions.

Joe, Brown, for so I shall call him, was at least 6 feet high, with a corresponding "breadth of beam." His appearance was pleasing in the extreme tho' of the dray-horse cast. Grove of sand-colored locks bounded his face, a plantation of mustaches adorned it, and an aristocratic imperial flourished beneath the brow of a huge vermillion mountain, or lip, between which and another of similar proportions, was situated a mouth—par excellence—like, as Mr. Weller remarked, an annual lease. Two straggling rows of Brobdignagian rocks, beautifully lacquered with Ess. Tobacco, studded the cavity; these, which he called teeth, with the addition of a dwarf nose, completed the catalogue of nature's embellishments. That he had been peculiarly favored by that lady, he modestly owned: "but" said he, with a philosophical chuckle, "andsome his, as andsome does" which trite proverb, uttered in the dialect of Cockaigne of which he was a native, and to which, his mother declared, "a hornement." Of his birth and parentage I am unable to speak positively, he having been, when I first encountered him, steward of a small brig. Promotion, however, has overtaken him, and I introduce him to the reader as Captain Brown, Schooner Morphine.

Besides himself there were two other gentlemen in the Cabin, who acted as guards of honor to Capt. B.,

* Agreeably to our promise of last week, when noticing Doctor Parker's letter on this subject, we now republish the above from the American Journal of Science and Arts.

† The substance of this sketch is the same as that published in the New Haven Herald on the day of the occurrence; but as that sketch was drawn up in haste, careful reflection has since suggested a few additions and alterations of phraseology, with a view of rendering the statement more explicit.

‡ Apparent time, or a quarter past five, mean time.

or, as Hassam mysteriously insinuated, over a few cases of medicine in the hold. One of them had been mate of some coasting vessel—stout, sentimental and a vocalist; whose baptismal cognomen was Adolphus. The other, a true exotic of Cockaigne, had originally served under General somebody, according to his own account, but had latterly practised in a medical capacity. Capt. B. always declared, however, that Mr. William Rufus Montmorenci, or as he profanely styled him, Bill, had once been groom to some half-pay Captain, and once lob-lolly-boy in an infirmary.

"Well Brown," simpered Adolphus, "so you're fled from the rude embraces of Boreas and the loud bursting of the mountain seas casting their silvery foam around, to enjoy the grosser pleasure of imbibing diluted Alcohol! What says Shakespeare of the sea; 'The sea-the sea-the open sea'!"

"Did you ever?" said Mr. William, opening his mouth; "Vy I've heerd the General hinscribe it to Chevally Welcome."

"You're mistaken, replied Adolphus: Shakespeare alone could have eulogised the ocean in such sublime language.

A scene like the present always awakes my muse and, if you'll allow me, I will recite a stanza I have just composed,"

A "heave a head" from Brown and "go it" from Bill encouraged him, and after a couple of dramatic flourishes and two "hems" he thus delivered himself:

"He went on deck to make all snug,
Leaving below a big glass of grog!
The waves were high, and strong the breeze,
And black the sky, and white the seas.
The sea was white, the sky was black,
And high the waves, the wind not slack!
The-the-wind-wind-no, breeze."

"Not bad (tho' I say it) for an extempore" said the poet.

"Idon't know vot a hextemper his, but I must hown the verses his fine" said the admiring Bill, looking Byronic taste; "Dolphy comes it strong in that line, and no mistake" the word mistake being accompanied by a most enthusiastic blow upon the table, whereby Captain Brown's tumbler was fractured, and the "diluted alco`ol" soaked up in his inexpressibles.

"What a—fool you are Bill" said the offended commander, again making the usual cacophythic reference to the sanguinary nature of Mr. William's idiotcy.

"Sir" shrieked the latter individual "do you mean for to come for to hinsult me? My feelins is wounded my honner boutraged, and Sir (here a slight tremor in the speaker was perceptible,) the hinsult must be riped bout with blood." To be continued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Mr. Editor.

The Chinese ingenuity, and knowledge of those they have to deal with, is in no way more clearly shown, than in their success in all struggles with foreigners, by first creating a division amongst the foreigners, and then fighting off the one party against the other, instead of directly entering the field themselves.

Thus England sent a Representative here, who wished to put our access to the Chinese Ear beyond those, having an interest in doing us wrong!—a violent party war is got up—and, ultimately, a large class of merchants (calling themselves Britssh subjects,) actually petition their nation's Representative, to give up his object and leave Canton: being the exact step the Chinese wished for.

Next, a benevolent institution (a floating Hospital) is set agoing at Whampoa—again party is at work—and the Chinese, instead of burning or sending away the ship, by force, as any other government would have done who disapproved of her presence, they attack the feelings of an influential foreign individual, by sending a security merchant and linguist to say they dread torture and banishment! if the Hospital-ship is not removed—their cunning succeeds—Feeling for two Chinese, instead of care for the health of hundreds of British seamen, carries the day, and the ship walks off.

Once more—In the present oppressive system, of an encreased set of duties, (without any alteration in the Emperor's tariff) mark how they work—they do not come and say—"These goods must pay certain duties or they cannot be cleared"—No! that would bring them into direct contact with the foreigner!—They say "the ship which brought these goods cannot get her pass or portclearance until the duties are paid on what she brought"—thus all the consignees of ships are set in direct opposition to the consignees of Goods—the battle is carried on betwixt them, and the cunning Chinese stands by enjoying the storm.

The consignee of the ship cares nought whether the duty be legal or not, so it is paid, and the ship entitled to her grand chop—so he fights like a Trojan in the ranks of the Hoppo's officers and dutyleviers, against his own countrymen, though the subject at issue, over a cargo, would amount to twice the whole freight of the vessel from Britain.

On the other hand, the consignee of goods not caring whether the vessel lay six months at Whampoa, warmly battles for the smallest duty, and, instead of meeting a Howqua or a Mowqua in the breach—he meets a man with a blue coat and gilt buttons, whom at first he would be disposed to look on as a fellow-soldier, until he in the blue coat shouts "high duties"—"prompt pay!"—and the Emperor of China for ever! A Baillie Jarvie confronts him with "Let Glasgow flourish! up with the weawers! and down with Wong-tei!

So, at it they go, but all the time the contest to make good the disputed duty is carried on by the Emperor through his worthy allies the consignees of ships from Britain-not his Chinese tax gatherers.

This, Mr. Editor, appears to me truly the mode the Chinese rule us,—the bad effects I see clearly—but I am not wise enough to point out remedies—can you?

"SPECTATOR."

Canton, 29th October 1838.

Opium.

Sir,—I have just read, in your publication of this day, the Circular memorial regarding the Opium trade in China. To say the least, the subject as stated by Messrs. Olyphant & Co. (for it would appear by by your Editorial remarks, that they do not wish to veil the authorship of these papers!) is not only ill timed, but comes with a peculiar suspicion from those Gentlemen. The question is one which not merely affects the interests of British merchants resident in China, but enters materially into that of British possessions in India. To the American merchant the trade is of no importance whatever, and it would have been wise in the Gentlemen named, before giving publicity to sentiments which must be considered of a dangerous tendency to all foreigners resident in China, to have first viewed the subject in all its bearings.

"By identifying foreign Petitions with great domestic concerns it is hoped they will receive a consideration denied to them on their own merit," is the language of the "Circular." Such undoubtedly would he the result, if questions of great national interest to China, would receive from its population the support of a legitimate public opinion and a just and rational patriotism. But I would ask, where is such to be found in a country the Government of which is venal in the extreme—where there is no patriotism—the prejudices and national vanity of the people, fostered for ages, by Imperial Edicts, and cemented and fortified by arbitrary custom, do not deserve a name so noble;—where the Officers of Government, so palpably corrupted as they are universally allowed to be, may alone be said to form the public opinion of the Country, and its only organ. Their opinion, if I judge correctly, being responded to by the mass of the population, thus improving on Pope's maxim: "That whatever is, is right."

It is evident then, that such a plan of proceeding as that contemplated by Messrs. Olyphant & Co., would not only fail but give rise to further vexations to foreigners. For besides the well known prejudices of the Chinese, which naturally would accost the pretended morality of the Farqui, and view every idea of good Government, coming from them, with derision, distrust and loathing,—the officers of Government are too much implicated in the trafic of Opium to respond to the views of these Gentlemen. And it is as evident that Foreigners, by shewing to the Chinese Government their differences of opinion in commercial pursuits, will only augment their own burdens. To be powerful with such a nation as this is, unanimity, firmness, and decision ought to constitute our peculiar policy. Squabble as much as we may choose, within our own circle, if such must needs be, but let not our divisions extend beyond.

Let me not, however, be misunderstood. I say boldly, the present traffic in Opium is most pernicious to this Empire. But the fault lies not with us, but with its own Government. The extraction of the immense quantity of the precious metals, year after year, must be attended with ruinous consequences to the Country. But how is the evil to be remedied? By Imperial Edicts forbidding the trade on the pain of death? The past will answer these questions better than any one can do, not only in the history of this, but of every Country in the world, where severe legislative enactments were had recourse to in similar cases of policy. And such must ever fail where those whose duty it is to punish, are the most deeply implicated. We all know besides that there is such a principle in human nature, as to long for that which is forbidden. And the more severe the prohibition, the greater the anticipated enjoyment.

I feel proud in owning the immense balance of trade in favor of Great Britain, which Messrs. Olyphant & Co. would hint to the Chinese as a great argument for adopting their views, but I presume to observe that with such a point, none but British subjects, in the present relations of China with all foreign nations, have the slightest concern. And if such an argument could be fairly used, I presume there are other nations besides China, where a balance of trade is shown in favor of Great Britain, and to which Messrs. Olyphant & Co's. benevolence might with equal propriety be directed.

What then, we would ask, is the remedy which would most effectually do away not only with the demoralizing effect of the drug on the people, but the ruin which attends the industrious portion of the population in its acquisition?

Would it not be by the LEGALIZATION OF THE TRAFIC, a step, we do presume to think, a wise Government, under such peculiar circumstances, would have long ago adopted. And what, I would ask, would be the consequences of such a step? The value of the Opium paid at present, as it must necessarily be, in the precious metals, would be then exchanged for articles of native produce, and native manufacture. And the whole portion of the people, depraved by the indulgence of beastly and degrading appetites, would thus pay to the industrious classes, the full price of their indulgences, and in the result benefit the Empire, as an encreasing market would arise for the industry of its population. The bringing them into more extended, and of consequence, into more social contact with civilized nations, is a desideratum, which cannot but be ardently wished for, by all those who have, in reality, an extended benevolence. And not that "sickly sentimentalism," unfortunately so prevalent, which we fear, without a breach of charity, is the result either of selfish and interested views or of personal vanity.

While the evident result of a legalization of the trade, is thus shown to benefit the Chinese, let us not overlook the distress which would be consequent on a rude and violent stoppage of the trade to the cultivators in India, a large and industrious portion of its inhabitants, and whose ruin would be certain before their industry could be directed into other channels. And that too without benefiting the Chinese, but in reality encreasing the evils of the present Opium trade.

Much more might be urged on the policy, and I would add, the humanity, of legalizing the traffic. But the question is one perfectly well understood by the Canton merchants, and its importance, I believe, fully appreciated by the British government. It is, Sir, the Governments of our respective countries to which we must look for interference with the policy of the Chinese Government in its foreign relations, and not to the pressing upon it of party views among the mercantile community of this place. To the former we must look for any good which can possibly arise to us, in such cases, to the latter for the certain promotion of Chinese contempt and Chinese intolerance. The preamble alone of the Memorial is quite sufficient to awaken both in the minds of the Chinese authorities.

I would rejoice if it were possible to leave the subject here, but it is useless to deny the feelings of indignation which have arisen in my mind from the arguments which Messrs. Olyphant & Co. would draw from our most pure and holy Religion, or rather, I should say, from the manner in which these arguments are stated. I know not these gentlemen, Sir, and therefore speak from the prima facie evidence which their extraordinary publication affords. Were their memorial intended to be addressed to a people who were in point of civilization reckoned barbarous, it is possible Messrs. Olyphant & Co's. mode of illustration might be pardoned. But I contend, Sir, that the language which we ought to hold, in our addresses to the Chinese, in regard to our Religion, and our great hopes hereafter, ought to be clothed in a language more befitting to them, as a civilized people, to us, and above all, to the Great Author of our Salvation. I fear too much incurring the charge, hating, as I most sincerely do, the very idea of cant, that I refrain from saying one word more on this subject.

I will not enlarge, as it would be most ungracious, on the wording of the memorial, but I cannot help observing that there is, I will not say, a sycophancy of language, but a want of dignity in tone, throughout the whole paper that alone would render it unexpedient to be presented.

Neither can I see how it would be possible for a court so constituted as that of Pekin is, to listen, but with feelings of the most sublime wonder, to the audacity of Foreigners presuming to counsel his Imperial Majesty to send envoys to the west, to teach him, by their researches, the true art of governing, even altho' such envoys should find their way to Washington for that purpose.

I can honestly declare, that I take up this subject as I find it. I am utterly unacquainted with Messrs. Olyphant & Co., and therefore can have no personal hostility to them. They have made themselves public men by the memorial, and as such, of course, amenable to public opinion. If I speak harshly, it arises from the first strong impressions of honest conviction. I do not impugn their motives, altho' we all know how jealously one ought to regard even such. I believe Messrs. Olyphant & Co. to be perfectly convinced of the justice of the cause they advocate; but I would seriously recommend to them, instead of applying unauthorizedly and most unexpediently on their own responsibility to the Chinese Government, in this or any other great question, to correspond with their own Government, who alone are the legitimate organs of American grievances.

If by the unauthorized expression of their own opinions, however virtuous they may appear to themselves, they in any degree, compromise the safety, comfort, or prosperity of the British merchant, to say nothing of their own, as well as of every foreigner, I do not see how they can have any reason for congratulation, in the course they are pursuing, and, moreover, the propagation of our holy Religion is not to be entrusted to those engaged daily in wordly affairs, but to its own peculiar and authorized ministers.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

THE REGATTA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Sir,—I am exceedingly sorry to find that any thing but a good feeling should exist among the members of the "Canton Regatta Club" on the approach of the present Regatta. I cannot help mentioning one circumstance, which seems to be laid hold of as a cause of dissension, and that is the unfortunate foul ng of the Dolphin with the Young Queen at the last meeting. The cause of this accident was fully explained at the time, and to all appearance was deemed perfectly satisfactory to the parties concerned; and why at the present time it should be brought forward, as a cause for not entering boats, appears both unreasonable and ungenerous, in as much as it is allowing private feeling to get the better of public spirit; and as Regatta tend in a great measure to promote healthful exercise and a friendly intercourse among this Community it is much to be regretted that any thing else than a good feeling among the members, at this our fourth meeting, should exist; where formerly the greatest good will and satisfaction prevailed.

I Remain, Dear Sir,
Your Humble Servant.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 3rd Nov.

Our Correspondent "Spectator" complains of the divisions frequently existing among the foreign community on questions in which the Chinese are concerned, by means of which the latter manage to get the better of foreigners in most disputes that occasionally happen, and adduces several instances of this to support his position. The first is, the differences that arose among foreigners during Lord Napier's stay in Canton, when many, seeing themselves threatened with severe loss on account of the stoppage of the trade, represented to that nobleman their situation, begging that he would no longer oppose the Chinese Government. Lord Napier, as every body knows, soon after left Canton, without having accomplished the object of his visit, viz—direct intercourse with the Chinese authorities. It would be of little use now to recapitulate the whole of that unhappy event, the attempt to bomb and the Chinese Government into greater friendship with the British nation, etc; but that many merchants, British subjects, seeing themselves exposed to great loss, should represent this to their nation's representative, and ask of him to discontinue measures which caused such loss, appears to us very natural and by no means blameable, considering the little prospect there was, of Lord Napier's contemplated line of conduct being successful, and that it would probably be difficult to obtain restitution for the losses suffered, on account of the Superintendent's conduct, from the British Government.

As regards the Hospital ship, we certainly do not share our correspondent's regrets that the vessel was ultimately sold to the Hong-merchants—it was an act of justice due to the security merchant in whose name she stood, and to the Linguist, who were both, by her continued stay at Whampoa exposed to severe punishment, while the advantage British seamen derived from it as a Hospital ship were very trifling indeed, it having been resorted to during it's sickness; most men as well as their Captains preferring to have the surgeon's attendance on board of their own ship. However desirable it may be to have some such establishment for the sick seamen, it was, in our opinion, all things considered, imperative on those who had the management of that Hospital ship to withdraw her from Whampoa.

We now arrive at the third complaint of our correspondent, and this presents features of more difficulty than the two preceding. This is the settlement of duties on goods, in order to enable a ship about sailing, and in which those goods were imported, to obtain her Grand Chop, or permit to leave.

It is assumed by the Chinese Customhouse that the Hong-merchants pay all the duties on goods, both imported and exported, and they are therefore held liable for the payment. During the Company's monopoly, this was generally done, or where importers stored their own goods, the settlement of duties to be paid by them, was not attended with so many difficulties as now, the trade being then in but few hands. Since the freetrade however, and since the wealthier Hong-merchants have discontinued dealing in manufactures, the custom has obtained, for importers to store many of their Cotton and Woollen-manufactures themselves, paying the duty thereon which is settled for them by the Linguist. The object of importers in doing this, is to have themselves the control over their goods, which, the duty paid, they may either sell to Hong-merchants or to outside dealers as suits them best: mostly preferring the latter as purchasers, as they either pay Cash down, or give produce in barter on receipt of the goods, whilst Hong-merchants always require a credit of uncertain date. The practice however, of importers paying the duties themselves, is like many others, illegal, but connived at by linguists and Hong-merchants; the Government only looks to the Hong-merchant in whose name the ship is secured, for the payment of the whole of the duties due on her Cargo, and their not being paid at the time of the vessel's projected departure, her sailing permit is refused until all dues are paid up. It happens however, that, assuming the Hong-merchants to pay the duties, the Government affect to consider it as no ways concerning foreigners to know how much exactly that duty amounts to, and have accordingly hitherto refused publishing an exact tariff, and much scope is thus given to the customhouse officers for exacting higher than ordinary duties. This naturally leds to opposition on the part of the importers, who refuse to pay a duty they consider unfair. The consequence is, the detention of the ship that brought the goods, though her owners or agents have no further interest in them, than having laden them on freight, thus exposing parties, entirely strangers to the dispute, to heavy loss. We are well aware of the hardships to which the importer is exposed by being obliged, within a certain period, to pay duties by him considered unjust, but it appears to us but fair that he, and not the owners and agents of the ship should be the sufferers, as long as the present system continues; for they derive the benefit sought for in clearing the goods themselves for the duties. We see no means, whilst the present system of conducting the trade is persevered in by the Chinese, how the hardship complained of can be removed. It is one naturally arising from the Co-hong, as at present established, and from that chain of responsibility which runs through all the Chinese Government, from the lowest police agent to the person nearest the Emperor. A great object would it be, indeed, to obtain the establishment of a regular custom-house, through which all goods must pass, and where, whoever the importe, the duties must be paid according to a published tariff. But the Hong-monopoly is naturally opposed to any such concessions to the foreign trade, which would then naturally, as far imports at least are concerned, go into the hands of many more of the outside dealers than it does at present. Unfortunately the jealousy of the Chinese, of all innovations, allows us not to indulge in any hopes that such customhouse will be soon established, if ever; but this would be the only means, we believe, that would remove the grievance of which importers have now to complain.

We noticed in our last shipping report the arrival from Manila, of the French 52 gun frigate L'artémise. Her Commander, Capt. La Place, the same who in the Favorite visited Canton in 1830, has since, with several of his officers arrived in Canton, and our neighbours vie with each other in hospitality, to render their short stay here as agreeable to them as possible. It appears that the Chinese authorities entertained no scruples as to allowing these gentlemen to visit Canton, and they came up in inside Chop-boats, whilst the officers of the British ships of war lately here were jealously watched lest they should attempt to reach the provincial city. This difference of treating men of the same profession, but of different nations, most probably arises from the jealousy the Chinese entertain of the English, as neighbours on their western frontier, and to the pilot's report, in the case of Admiral Maitland, of another "barbarian eye" having reached the Celestial Empire, the Chinese being unwilling, since Lord Napier, to have any thing to say to such "Eyes."

In another column will be found a letter from a Correspondent, signed A., in answer to the Circular memorial we published in our last, as communicated to us by Messrs Olyphant & Co. We, in many instances, agree with the view A takes of the matter in question, and hope that the arguments he brings forward will deter the framers of that memorial from having it translated and presented to the local authorities of Cantou. We are convinced that not only would the presenting of such a document do no good to foreigners in Canton, but, on the contrary, that it will increase the jealousy the Chinese already entertain of them—and, moreover, we do think it out of place, that merchants, come to the country with the ostensible purpose of prosecuting their trade, should take upon themselves, unasked, the office of political advisers to the Chinese Government, which they do, if any of our neighbours sign the memorial alluded to. That such interference in their domestic concerns would be received with any thing rather than grateful feelings on the part of the Chinese, is to be expected, and we would recommend, if foreign merchants feel themselves aggrieved by any Chinese regulations, in their representations to complain of them solely, instead of entering on subjects unconnected with them.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—The only transaction in Longcloths, that has been reported to us, is a sale of about 5,000 Pieces white at about 4.40, we believe, and of good quality; otherwise the market remains very quiet. In Cotton Yarn, little has been doing: a small parcel of about 20 bales of first quality Nos. 30 @ 36 fetched $ 38, but we doubt if that price, just now, could be obtained for any quantity.

Woollens.—The market continues firm for Spanish Stripes, and some little advance has been offered on one or two parcels, but we have not heard of any actual sales. Longells, have rather declined, holders appearing desirous to realize, as heavy supplies are expected per St. Vincent and Eliza Stewart.

Metals.—Without transactions during the week.

Rice.—continues at very low rates.

Straits Produce.—Pepper. is dull of sale at 7 @ 7½ according to quality, but we hear a parcel was sold at Macao @ 7¼. Betel-nut is improving a little.

Cotton.—No alteration in the price of the Bombay staple and holders are firm. In Madras and Bengal there is no enquiry whatever. There are various accounts of the Nankin Crop, but it would appear that the injury has been only partial.

The deliveries during the past month are stated at,

Bombay,	Bengal,	Madras,	Total.
28,796	2 688	1,441	30,925 bales.

leaving a stock of

72,281	15 524	14,419	102,204 bales.

Opium.—There has been very little doing during the week, and it is said the authorities are again beginning to annoy the retailers. The deliveries during the last month were: Patna old 72, new 554; Benares, old 1, new 145; Malwa. 1484; Total 2256 chests. Stock remaining 1st November, Patna old 246, new 1977; Benares old 115 new 728; Malwa 3617; Total 6083 Chests.

EXPORTS.

Nankin-Silk.—The holders continue firm, and no one can, of course, venture to purchase.

Tea.—Nothing yet doing.

Exchange.—There is a large amount of bills offering in the market. Bank United States, and credits, for which generally the purchasers require local endorsements. We have been informed that considerable sums of bills on Messrs. Morrison Cryder & Co. have been negotiated this week by Captains and Supercargoes of the American vessels now in port, at the exchange of 4s. 7d. per dollar. We understand the amount negotiated is upwards of £ 13,500.—Sales to some extent of Republican dollars are reported at Lintin at 1 per cent Premium.

Korea.

From a Correspondent.

We know of no country in the world which has attracted less notice than Korea. Look wherever you will on the wide face of the globe, and you will always find some connexion existing between one nation and another, the tribes of the interior of Africa not excepted, only absolute savages like the aborigines of the Andaman Isles may be excused for refusing all intercourse with foreigners; but the Koreans who have come under the transforming influence of the Celestial Empire can certainly offer no such plea. Trade removes the obstacles, and binds nation to nation, by the strongest ties—self interest. But though Korea has many harbours and is a peninsula, though in the neighbourhood of the most industrious people of Asia, the Chinese and Japanese, though rich in productions for a foreign market, it can scarcely be said to have any commerce. Not a single junk, unless cast away by stress of weather, goes to Korea. The opposite coast of Shantung is perhaps 36 hours sail to the west Korean Island; the former has neither firewood nor timber, the latter abounds in both; yet, Foke, who is always in search of something useful, never goes over to fetch such necessaries of life near his door. For this we have never been able to account, for supposing even that it was not the will of Government, when gain is in question, Foke finds means to evade all law. Nor was this exclusive manner of dealing with foreigners in such a summary way old custom; no, it is the result of the policy of our enlightened times. What shall we then say, when all the intercourse which Korea carries on is confined to a fair held in autumn and spring on the frontier of Mantchooria, and that, moreover, their tribute bearer, who goes thrice a year to Peking, puts out there his wares in a stall and returns with an exchange of goods. The traffic carried on between Japan and Korea, on one of the intermediate islands, is very trifling, and rather deserves the name of barter. Now this is the sum total of all the trade, of a country nearly as large as England and Scotland. Thanks to antinational policy and misanthropy for these glorious results.

No foreigner has ever travelled freely in their country. Even Chinese ambassadors are anxiously watched and treated as prisoners, and when the Jesuits, by order of the Chinese monarch, were surveying Montchouria, they received strict injunctions not to cross the frontiers of this recluse nation. We only find a single instance in the case of a Dutch crew being wrecked on the island Quelpaert, in the seventeenth century that people from a far country were allowed to take up their abode in the southern Provinces. But though they were not ill treated, they were not allowed to return home, a kind intention which they did not heed.

A Korean looks a very grotesque figure. Besides the enormous hat which covers a pointed cap, he wears a pair of sleeves of the moderate dimension of a sack. This is quite in contrast again with his shoes made of canvass, which fit most closely to his feet, and he is as proud of their smallness as a Chinese lady. The males are remarkable for their symmetry, the females for their extreme ugliness, and they appear here to hold the rank of beasts of burthen. The unmarried youth wear a very long tail dangling down, like Foke's appurtenance, with this difference however, that the forepart of the head is not shaven. The elder gentry have a mere tuft of hair hidden in a conical cap. Old and young are gravity personified and the very children look careworn. For hours you may observe not a single change of the muscle, their motions are stately, their gait the picture of grandeur. From the highest Mandarin down to the lowest fisherman this characteristic is the same. If you wish to figure to yourself a true Korean, you ought to imagine a man with a long pipe, which is seldom left to cool, squatting on the ground and fixing his eyes upon a single object without moving his head. He is a very Turk in many respects, though he may be on the whole more industrious and less warlike. For drinking liquor they have perhaps no equal as a nation, spirits do not affect them, they swallow alcohol like water. If a stranger visit them, they do not offer useless tea, but some raw onions, dried fish and liquor, stronger than whiskey and gin, of which a single man will drink off one or two bottles without shewing the least symptoms of drunkenness. They are very cautious in their conversation, shy and timid in their whole intercourse with all the badges of despotism; slavish fear and servile submission await them. Their language is full, sounding, and very distinct, their literature that of the Chinese, and their common written medium a curious syllabary. In their manners they shew too much the barbarian, but they are at the same time haughty and honor foreigners inclusive of the Celestials with that honorable title. They have scarcely ever been independent, though the generosity of the Central Empire permits them to remain merely tributary, and to rule themselves according to their pleasure.

THE CHARGE OF PIRACY, IN THE CASE OF THE FRENCH SHIP ALEXANDRE NOW AT NEWPORT.—The French consul for the state of Rhode Island has arrived in this city, with this ship's papers, from which it appears that under the command of Bouet Louis dit Dubois, who ranked as a lieutenant of the French navy, she regularly cleared from Bordeaux for Samarang. Benoit Marland, belonging to the maritime service at Bordeaux as quarter master, acting as 2d captain.

It appears that a few days after leaving Samarang, the captain, Bouet, the lieutenant Morpain Jean, the boatswain and four sailors, were missing—reported to have been washed overboard by a sea.

After this the vessel, under the command of Marland, the 2d captain, put into Mauritius (Isle of France) to repair, where the French consular agent was satisfied that all was right. Here ten new French sailors, three British sailors, and one American sailor, with two Malay women, came on board when the ship sailed, making 22. The Malay women were said to have been found on board two days after the ship sailed. The ship was cleared for Bordeaux, but after passing the Azores, and within ten or twelve days sail of the coast of France, the destination was changed for Boston.

This vessel on the 20th instant reached Newport, and soon after her arrival the town was filled with whispers of suspicion. The commander, Marland, came on shore on Sunday, and tried to dispose of his vessel and cargo to the merchants there. The French consul hearing this, deemed it his duty to go on board the vessel, and make an examination. The crew all appeared obedient and in good health, and all the consul did was to order the captain to bring his papers, and some of the crew, for the purpose of satisfying the people of Newport that their suspicions were incorrect. To this Marland assented, but being afterwards informed by his American sailor that Newport was a small place, and had no French consul, Marland said he was going to Boston, and would not surrender the papers. The consul then deemed it his duty to apply to the collector to have the vessel detained, and placed under the charge of a revenue cutter, till he could hear from the consul general at New York, which request was complied with.

Marland then endeavored to make an escape, with a large amount of gold and diamonds, and with one of the Malay women, to come to New York on board the steamboat. The consul then caused Marland to be arrested, and after some difficulty the arrest was made. The remainder of the crew, from Bordeaux to Samarang, next morning were arrested and lodged in gaol. Officers were then put on board the ship, the crew assenting, after a great deal of trouble.

During this time many things occurred to excite suspicion. One of the Malay women, the pretended wife of Marland, contrived, during the affray on board the ship, to carry away a bag of gold containing about $12,000, and a sealed box containing a large quantity of diamonds. Marland, it is stated, confided the care of his Malay wife and treasures to the M. Seiler, who figured so conspicuously in this port when the foreign enlisted corps was embarking fro Florida—but Marland soon finding out the reputation of Seiler, sent back his wife after the treasures, when Seiler was not to be found at home, but was making his way for the New York steam boat, where the gold and diamonds were found, and lodged in the bank under seal.

The French consul thinks that all these circumstances are enough to justify the detention of the vessel, and to make a request upon the American government, that Marland and his confederates be sent to France for examination. The sudden loss of the captain, and so many of the crew, the deviation of the voyage without any rational reason, the arrival at Newport, the extraordinary conduct there, the course of Marland with his women, &c., he thinks justify suspicions of piracy. Of this, however, the public can judge as well as ourselves. We have sifted a one sided story, and we think we have got at the general facts, It may be necessary to add that the persons suspected of piracy have not yet been publicly examined.

POSTSCRIPT.—We are farther informed that orders left Washington, 25th, for the three-decker Hercules, at Norfolk, to repair to Newport, and take the captain and crew of the French ship to France, and that the vessel herself, with a new crew, was to be sent to France.—New York Express.

English News.

Singapore Free Press, 4th October.

The Coronation of our young Queen came off on the 28th ulto., the event being celebrated in a manner becoming the English nation. The weather proved beautifully fine, London poured forth it's living world. Business was entirely set aside and a general holiday determined on, nothing marred the events of the day and all was joyousness and festivity. The Gazette contains a long list of promotions in the Army, but those in the Naval Department are not so numerous as anticipated. Very few Peers have been created (contrary to expectation) but the list of Baronets is very long. A series of fetes have been given by the Queen and nobility to the Foreign Ambassadors and suites since their arrival, and it is said their stay will be prolonged till the end of the month. This day a Grand Review will take place in their presence at Woolwhich. The Queen gave a state Ball on the 2nd and others are to come off on 12th and 30th inst.

PORTUGAL.—Lisbon has again been the scene of disturbance. On the 14th ulto, the anniversary of the Procession of Corpus Christi, the King with the Ministers and others attending it were attacked by the mob and assailed with stones and threats: the Band was called on to play the Hymn of the constitution of 1820 and complied accordingly. A detachment of Cavalry at last put an end to the disorder. Several Battalions of the National Guards have been disbanded for encouraging, rather than endeavoring to put down, the Rioters. The Queen was at Cintra.

AMERICA.—The advices from this Quarter bring particulars of the burning of a Canadian Steam boat the "Sir Robert Peel" in the St. Lawrence by a band of 50 men from the American Frontier. This Vessel was lying about 7 miles from French Creek where all the crew and passengers were sent, after which the vessel was fired and totally destroyed with every thing on board including drs 60,000, Lord Durham and suite arrived at Quebec 20th May.

The motion for repealing the Specie circulation has passed the Senate by 34 to 6, and the House of Representatives 54 to 26 The President has submitted that an extension of the period to 2 years be made for the removal of the Cherokee Indians, with further liberal appropriations of money for that purpose. The whole of the Town of Moravia in Alabama was destroyed by fire on the 16th May. A Cashier of the Bank is accused as the Incendiary.

Lord Durham has issued a proclamation dissolving the special Council, and has appointed Mr. C. Buller M. P., Mr. Turton, Col. Cooper, the Provincial Secretary, and Commissary General to form the new Executive Council. His Lordship's arrival had created satisfaction, and addresses had been presented to him. Sir J. Colbourne has been despatched to Upper Canada. Another Steam boat, the Telegraph, had been fired into and ransacked at Brockaville. The Governor General has offered a reward of £1,000 for the apprehension of any persons concerned in the burning the "Sir R. Peel" and many arrests have been made.

WEST INDIES.—A late arrival confirms the previous statements of the determination of the Legislatures of Barbadoes, St. Vincent, Mountserrat, St. Lucia, Tortola, St. Kitts, Nevis, and Dominica to emancipate the Negro Population entirely on 1st August next. In Jamaica the Council was summoned, on 5th June, to take this subject under consideration.

The United States ship Francis Stanton arrived here yesterday from Boston the 21st June, by which we have received the Boston Continel and Gazette up to 21st June, but have no room for any particular notice of their contents.

We have been favored with the following Extract from a letter dated Liverpool 23rd June 1838, from a party connected with the Iron trade, to a party in Singapore:—

"From the immense undertaking of railways in "this country, the continent, and United States, "there is very little prospect of a fall in Iron or "Iron articles. The make of Iron in the United "Kingdom is about 800,000 Tons annually, and "for this there are manufactured for rail way pur"poses 400,000 Tons, leaving only half the entire "production for export and for general purposes."

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—The Great Western steam ship, Captain Hoskin, R. N., commander, cast anchor in Kingsroad, Plymouth, at about half past two o'clock on Sunday, having performed the homeward passage in the wonderful short space of twelve and a half days. The outward bound voyage was by this splendid vessel accomplished in 14½ days, having sailed from Bristol June 8th, and reached New York June 17, at four A. M., which place she left for Bristol June 25, at five P. M. Thus she has performed the whole voyage from Bristol to New York, and back again, in the unparalleled short space of 38 days, eight of which were spent at New York, which leaves her five weeks for the actual voyage, and which generally averages as many months by sailing vessels. The Great Western has brought over 92 passengers.

THE BRITISH QUEEN.—This stupendous steam ship, commanded by Captain Roberts, formerly of the Sirius, arrived at Port Glasgow on Saturday, and went into dock where she is to receive her machinery. The British Queen left Gravesend on Monday last, and was towed to Plymouth by the Vulture steamer. Betwixt these places she had foul winds. At Plymouth the Vulture left, and the Queen then came right round by the Land's End in fine style, carrying all sail and beating every vessel on her way, especially a French brig, which attempted to compete with her for some time. Having arrived at the tail of the bank early on Saturday morning she was towed into the wet dock at eleven, by the Samson steamer, the top of whose funnel it was observed, just reached the height of the Queen's paddle box. No one can have any proper idea of the vastness of this vessel, unless he goes on board. The Queen has a full length likeness of her Majesty in front, and is supposed to be the largest vessel in the world, being thirty-five feet longer than any ship in the British navy. The Queen will ply betwixt London and New York.

The Siecle notices the following story, as circulating in the various drawing rooms at Paris:—One of the principal conditions imposed by Marshall Soult, on accepting the embassy to London, was that he should demand the remains of Napoleon. The Duke of Wellington has hastened to back the application of his old opponent, and it is affirmed that the governor of St. Helena has been ordered to let the coffin of Napoleon be removed, and all due honours be paid to his glorious memory. The Prince de Joinville is for the first time, to assume the command of a frigate, & to repair to St. Helena, in order to convey back to France the remains of the Emperor, the young Prince is to be accompanied in his pious voyage by a soldier from every regiment in the French army. Napoleon's remains are to be deposited under the Place Vendome Column, when a religious ceremony is to take place, and to afford Louis Phillipe an opportunity of receiving, in a worthy manner, those who received his son in Germany. It is said that the Duke of Wellington will be invited to the ceremony, as well as one of the King of Prussia's sons.—Atlas, July 14th.

The usual annual and quarterly revenue tables, published on the 5th of July, present for the quarter a favorable balance, the total increase being 364,383*l.* On the year, however, there is a deficiency in the amount of income of 1,102,627*l.*, the revenue for that terminating on the 5th July, 1837, being 44,075,400*l.*, while this year the amount is only 42,972,773*l.* On analysing the different branches of the abstract it appears that there has been an increase on the quarter, in every department, except the excise. In the customs there has been a decrease on the year of 500,141*l.* but an increase on the quarter of 389,015*l.* In stamps, the deficiency on the year amounts to 76,791*l.*, the augmentation on the quarter to 45,393. In taxes the decrease on the year has been 92,974*l.*, the increase on the quarter 90*l.* In the Post Office the increase has been general, that on the year being 72,269*l.*, the quarter 38,265*l.* The contrary, however, as we have already stated, is the case in the excise, the deficiency on the year amounting to 726,504*l.*, while that on the quarter is 226,451*l.*, with respect to the Consolidated Fund, the probable amount of Exchequer Bills required to meet the charge on that account is stated at 7,860,946*l.*—Atlas, July 7.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON REGISTER.

New Rig,

SIR—In this quarter of the globe at the present time, if utility combined with novelty is at all considered worthy of notice, perhaps a late invention of mine, which combines so much of both, will not be looked over.

The invention is an entirely new construction for a vessel, and an entirely new rig adapted to the vessel. At Bombay I have doubtlessly proved the rig to possess advantages superior to all former ones; but there I had only a boat built after an old model to prove the rig on; when the government highly commended my ingenuity, but were sorry it was not then in their power to reward it. Not having the means left to build a vessel, I at that time dropped the idea, and until very lately never thought of constructing a model of my invention. I have now got one built on a small scale; the Admiral and most of the principal naval officers on this station have examined it, and also many other gentlemen belonging to merchant vessels, all of whom have given me so much encouragement that I am now induced to exert myself, and try to bring the invention into notice.

The rig, as I have stated before, possesses superior advantages to any other of a former plan I now beg leave to remark that it is my opinion the vessel also will possess the following enumerated superior advantages; namely:

Firstly:—She can be stronger built than any other of a former plan.

2dly. She will sail faster, and be more weatherly.

3dly. She will be a safer and easier vessel in a sea-way; and 4thly. You can manoeuvre her quicker and that at either end.

The model I have placed in Messrs. Hooker and Lane's office, where any gentlemen wishing to examine, may see it, the rig, and certificates of its properties.

I remain &c.

H. DEMPSTER.

Canton Nov. 6.

GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

SECOND ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE CANTON GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, PRESENTED AT A GENERAL MEETING HELD THE 3RD OF NOVEMBER, 1838.

In pursuance of the principle recognised in the Report presented at the meeting in November last, the Committee have continued to direct their attention to such subjects only, connected with the foreign trade, as have come before them in the ordinary course of events, or been referred for their decision by the parties more immediately. They still, for the reasons advanced in that Report, deem it important not to depart from this rule.

Your Committee will now, as briefly as possible, recapitulate their proceedings and decisions during the year, which, with those exceptions only where the Chamber on special occasions have already expressed their concurrence, will need the approval of a General Meeting to give them all the authority of which they are capable.

Amendment of the Constitution.

By an amendment proposed by your Committee and sanctioned by the Chamber, it is rendered imperative that there be an addition of four new members to the Committee annually, who shall be substituted for a like number of the old members whose terms of service must then cease. By this measure it is hoped the public interest in the business of the Chamber will be more effectually kept up, and the labours of office more equally distributed among the members.

East India Company's financial Agency.

ng on the opinion and opposition (unanimous it is believed) of the whole commercial body engaged in the trade to this country. The London Association have addressed the Court of Directors urging its removal; and your Committee have assured the Association of their hearty concurrence in any measure calculated to effect the desired end. The importance, to the free trade of abolishing the agency, is more than ever apparent, and it is deemed expedient that some new step be taken by which its injurious effect, on the Tea trade especially, may be placed in the strongest light.

Performance of the ceremony called Ko-tow.

In an address to Lord Palmerston by the London Association, your Committee notice they recommended, that in the event of any negotiator being sent by the British Government to Peking, he should not be precluded from performing the ceremonies required at that court. As this advice, if followed, was deemed by the Committee likely to affect injuriously the interests of Commerce, they considered that it fell within their province to oppose it, and accordingly have addressed a letter of remonstrance to the Association on the subject.

Post office establishment.

It will be recollected that in the last annual report the Committee were sanguine in their expectation of a speedy completion of arrangements, then in progress, which would place an efficient Post Office establishment in full operation. They were however disappointed. The boats, which were indispensable for the purpose, were suddenly employed in the opium trade, and no compensation that the Chamber could offer to the owners was equivalent to the profits which that traffic yielded them. The Committee are now of opinion that no adequate security can be obtained that any foreign boats, which might be engaged for the Post Office service, would not be in the same manner diverted to other employment; and the only alternative, in case the Chamber should deem a new attempt to establish a mail conveyance desirable, would be to purchase the requisite number of Boats, or at all events to have them absolutely under the Control of the Chamber.

Execution of Orders for Tea and Raw Silk.

The preamble and resolutions which were demanded by proceedings in England during the year 1837, and drawn up on this subject by your Committee, have already received the approbation of the community, by the signature of almost every foreign house in Canton, who forwarded copies to their correspondents in all quarters of the globe. Your Committee have reason to believe that the attention of parties concerned has been drawn to the subject, and the evils which it was intended to cure will be in a measure remedied. It is understood the document was brought to the notice of the London Association, and was discussed in that body, but the Committee, as yet, have no communication from them on the subject.

Claims on Agents in Canton.

In answer to a question submitted to them your Committee decided, that claims made by parties abroad, on their Agents in Canton, on account of transactions which have occured here, should be adjusted in China, and not elsewhere, but by consent of the Agent.

Del credere Commission.

Your Committee are it as their opinion that a charge of del credere on sales does not include a guarantee of Bills, remitted for the proceeds of the sales.

The Hong merchants' official intercourse with the Committee.

At the request of the hong merchants your Committee met them at their own room, and on two occasions received from them communications regarding the opium trade at Whampoa and in Canton. They solicited the aid of your Committee to arrest the traffic, but were told that it was a matter in which they could not interfere. The hong merchants have also sought and had interviews with the Committee on other subjects connected with foreign commerce, but the only points of public interest were, their communication respecting a change in the duty on longcloths, which is still under discussion with the Hoppo, with a probability of a final reduction in the rates; and that announcing the new charge for securing foreign vessels, on which the co-hong have since acted. These charges are, for securing All Rice laden ships, including port charges $1,189.50
A company's ship, reported as such, without
Rice $1,000.00
All other British and American vessels with-
Rice .. .. $ 700.

Settlement of Import Duties.

The system recommended in the last annual Report, was effectually tried by the foreign agents generally, but it was found that vessels continued to be delayed after they were ready for sea for want of the grand chop, and that in order to avoid the inconvenience and loss occasioned by such detention, a new plan must be adopted. Your Committee therefore drew up a report, which was unanimously approved of by a general meeting, in which they recommend that "in order to facilitate the procuring of the grand chop or port clearance of ships when ready for sea, the settlement of duties be considered as the business exclusively of the consignees of the goods, and that in all cases they be held responsible to the consigners of the ship in which they may have been imported."

Malwa Opium.

The various inquiries which were instituted on this subject, but not completed at the date of the last report, have since been brought to a close. All the information that could be collected from the commanders at Lintin respecting the quality of Malwa opium, and the causes of its frequent inferiority, was transmitted to the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, with such suggestions and advice on the part of your Committee as they deemed might be useful to inspectors and shippers.

Dishonoured Bills of Exchange.

The expediency of establishing a fixed per-centum for damage on protested Bills of Exchange in lieu of re-exchange, interest, and charges; and a consideration of the proper mode of proceeding in regard to the protest of Bills returned without the Bills themselves; engaged the attention of your Committee early in the year. They entered into correspondence with the Chambers of Commerce of Bombay and Calcutta, to obtain a knowledge of the practice in those places, but as yet have not received the final answers of those bodies, which are considered requisite before coming to any decision on this question.

Co-hong and their foreign debts.

In relation to this subject, the individual creditors themselves on the spot have managed the negotiations with the viceroy through the hong-merchants, and obtained an adjustment of their claims, which are agreed to be liquidated within specified periods. Your Committee have only been called on to transmit to the London Association, and other commercial bodies in Great Britain, such considerations connected with the question as they conceived might be advantageously urged on the attention of the British government, in case ministers should determine to interfere in behalf of foreign claimants, on this, or on any future similar occasion.

Silk privilege in foreign vessels.

The following points have been decided by your Committee on the application of interested parties

1st.—In the case of a chartered vessel the privilege belongs wholly to the Charterer, the captain being entitled to no part of it.

2nd.—Neither the charterer of a whole vessel, nor the agent of the ship, has a right to put silk on board for transhipment, without the consent of the other.

3rd.—The Charterer or Affreighter of part of a vessel is not entitled to any portion of the privilege without a special agreement to that effect.

Protection of Seamen in Canton.

In order to guard seamen in some measure when in Canton, on liberty or duty from the impositions to which they are exposed, your Committee determined to address the Hong-merchants on the subject, and to urge upon them the motive and humanity of closing the tippling shops in the vicinity of the foreign factories, from which, and from the nefarious practices of their keepers, the mischief chiefly, if not entirely, proceeds.

The application was well received by the Hong-merchants, and they promised to exert their power to remove the temptations to seamen, and the abuse complained of.

Chinese Interpreter.

Inconvenience being sometimes felt for want of an Interpreter, your Committee determined to accept the offer of Mr. S. Fearon to act in that capacity, and he is accordingly now engaged at a reasonable salary.

Space in front of the Factories.

Constant attention has been required to keep this space in a tolerable state of cleanliness, and free from the obstructions of a public market, and the stalls of itinerant shop keepers, with which it is liable to be covered. The Hong Merchants now maintain a police for the purpose, and as far as the Chinese are concerned there is not much ground of complaint.

Trade Statements.

These, for the year ending June 30th last, have been made out, and printed by direction of the Committee. They are, perhaps, as perfect as circumstances would permit, but it is hoped that the difficulties in the way of procuring the information required for their construction, will gradually disappear, and that the complete accounts of the Secretary may soon be given almost concurrently with the transactions themselves.

Accounts.

The receipts and expenditures of the past year, as stated by the Secretary, are herewith submitted. It will be noticed that the funds in hand are small, but the Committee will not allow themselves to doubt that means will be provided by the public to meet future necessary expences.

In conclusion, the Committee would express their sense of obligation for the indulgence which has been so freely extended to them in the discharge of their duties by the members of the Chamber generally, and by their foreign neighbours who are not members; and also their regret that their labors have not contributed in a much greater degree to the convenience and prosperity of foreign commerce. They do not, however, doubt the utility of the institution to accomplish the purposes for which it was established, and would appeal to the foreign community for a continuance of liberal support, to which they believe it may justly prefer strong claims.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 10th Nov.

The long looked for Cowasjee Family from Calcutta, and the Duke of Lancaster from Bombay, the latter with the English Overland mail to 14th July, have at last arrived; and we have by them received Calcutta papers to the 8th September, and the Sing. Free Press of 4th and 5th October. From the latter we recopy some of the latest Europe news, which are however of very little importance, the Queen's coronation being the principal event. This pageant is represented as having been one of the most brilliant ever exhibited, receiving additional lustre from the presence of a great many distinguished foreigners. Among these the Duc de Nemours, and Marshal Soult, and particularly the latter, appear to have been the most popular. The successful navigation by steam across the Atlantic, was causing a number of Steamers to be built for that purpose, and a Company for which Lord William Bentinck strongly interests himself, was about to be formed. Capital £1,000,000,—to steam to India by way of the Cape. Commercial accounts, six days later than what we published a fortnight since, being to the 13th July, are rather more favorable, at least we find the following regarding them, on that date "TEA, a good deal of enquiry in the market, and business doing to a considerable extent." Money is represented as being very abundant —discount 2½ @ 2¾ per Cent, and Consols 95¼ @ 95⅜.

The accounts from Calcutta are warlike. There are rumours of hostilities in Nepaul having actually broke out.—In Burmah, the British Envoy, Col. Benson, had not yet proceeded to the Capital, and consequently no interview with Tharawaddie had taken place; we see, however, from the Indian papers, that this prince's inclinations are thought to be in favor of hostility with the Company. A very important event is the defeat of the Persians near Herat by Ram Khan, before the English could come to the relief of Herat, as they intended to have done, in defence of the rights of Shah Soojee, the Company's protegé. This event, though favorable so far to the Company and Shah Soojee as regards the discomfiture of their common enemy, will naturally raise Ram Khan, who is said to be as near in blood to the throne as Shah Soojee, to the Musnud of Afghanistan, and the Company's friendship and protection transferred probably to him to the exclusion of Soojee.

We find the following notice in a paper of the new Republic Texas.

"Lost—a certificate for 320 acres of land, for my services in the Army from 25th April to 23rd of July, 1836, signed, Robert Kleberg." Thus, instead of the soldier's shilling, as in England, or the half of that only as in most countries on the continent, the adventurers that went to fight in Texas, received rather better than three acres and a half of land daily as their pay—fighting for young republics seems to be a good trade. We also see in the same paper, advertisements of slaves to be sold by auction, and offering rewards for others run away. Liberty, the Texans say, was what they sought when falling off from Mexico, under whose laws slaves are not suffered.

Mr. Dempster has requested us to republish the letter he addressed to the Canton Register, and our readers will accordingly find it in another column. The object is to make known, and to create with the public an interest in, a new model of a vessel constructed by Mr. Dempster, which he considers to combine advantages of safety and sailing qualities, superior to any models of vessels now in use. We are too little acquainted with the subject to be able to offer any opinion as to the claims this invention really possesses to the patronage of the public, but Mr. Dempster informs us that his model has been inspected by a number of professional men, who have given a favorable report upon it, and the inventor is anxious to have a trial made, by building a small vessel according to his model, and will, we believe, propose to the commercial community here, that such vessel be built at Macao, or elsewhere, and that the necessary funds be raised by subscription on shares. We hope that Mr. Dempster's ingenuity may meet with the desired support. The new rig recommended and invented by Mr. Dempster seems to possess better a retained claims to the attention of the public, it having been applied to a boat of the inventors, and in actual trial found to possess the advantages held out; we have moreover been shewn by Mr. Dempster a number of certificates given by professional men, of the Navy as well as the merchant service, highly favorable to the rig recommended.

GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. The second meeting of this body was held on Saturday last, J. C. GREEN, Esq., in the chair. We publish elsewhere the report of the Committee's labors during the year, and it's several items were severally commented on, as they were read by the Secretary. It will be observed that it is not the wish of the Committee to take the initiative in any thing, but to be active only in such cases as are brought under its notice. This principle is one, which, in a community constituted like ours, where no law can be enforced, and where, moreover, several of the merchants are not members of the Chamber, cannot conveniently be departed from, and explains at same time why the labors of the Committee have not been more comprehensive. We are convinced, nevertheless, that, though the Agency of the Chamber is, by circumstances, unavoidably more circumscribed than we would wish it to be, its effect upon the trade and our community has been beneficial, and will continue to be so, and probably encrease the influence already acquired as greater age will contribute to exact for it the deference generally allowed to habit or custom. As it is, by far the majority of the foreign community are members, nor do we miss among them the names of any of the firms whose business assigns to them the first commercial rank. The decisions of the Committee therefore, approved of by the General meeting, may well be considered as laws, and the Chamber thus takes the rank of a legislative body, with the only inconvenience, which, however, is considerable, of there being no executive, unless public opinion take it's place, which will necessarily, in most cases, be in favor of the rules approved of by the Chamber of Commerce. It is with pleasure we read some remarks in the London Mercantile Journal of 17th April regarding the Canton Chamber of Commerce, and cordially concur with the following we extract, which was also read at the meeting on Saturday last.

"We cannot dismiss this paragraph without adverting to the effect which Chambers of Commerce can produce upon trade. Here we have a practical exhibition of their utility and advantages, which we have so often advocated and illustrated in our paper. These regulation of this Chamber will have all the force of laws, and who so capable of making such arrangements as a Chamber of Commerce? These are matters with which Government could not interfere, if it would, and would not interfere if it could. They are done by commercial men. Canton has a Chamber of Commerce, active, influential, and advantageous; whilst London, the emporium of the Commerce of the world is without such an institution!"

Whilst our London cotemporary, advocates the establishment of a Chamber of Commerce in London, as an institution of great necessity there, where courts of civil law protect the merchant, the continuance of such an institution here is of paramount importance, nor ought pecuniar considerations interfere, since the foreign community here must consider itself in the place of a Republic, of which the Committee of the Chamber are the Representatives, sent to watch over the common good.

The Co-hong, by addressing several communications to the Chamber, have thereby acknowledged its official capacity.

The circumstances of an increase of the annual subscription being necessary, in order to defray the current expenses of the chamber, such as house rent, secretary's and Chinese interpreter's salary, which are the chief and almost only items of the account, threatened some secessions of members, but we hope that the necessity for the continuance of the institution will shew them that they cannot make a more useful outlay. The Committee have now proposed that the subscription of this year be, for firms, 60 $, and for individuals 25 $ each. This arrangement is to be proposed at a General meeting to be held on Saturday the 24th of this month, and the continuance of the Chamber will depend upon it's approval, since we see no possibility of the expenses being yet more reduced than they at present are, the Secretary having offered his services at one half his former salary, and even with this reduction the propo-ed subscription will but just cover the expenses of the year. The number of subscribers is at present estimated at 24 firms and 8 individuals.

The Gentlemen elected to serve on the Committee this year, are

H. H LINDSAY, Esq. Chairman.
W. S. WETMORE, Esq. Deputy Chairman.
A. MATHESON, Esq.
G. T. BRAINE, Esq.
WM. BELL Esq.
WM. THOMSON, Esq.
WM. DYLAND, Esq.
C. W. KING, Esq.
NANABHOY FRAMJEE, Esq.
HORMUSJEE BHOY KUSTOMJEE, Esq.
P. TIEDEMAN JR., Esq.
C. B. ADAM, Esq.

We regret to have to report the death of Tinqua, partner of the Poukhequa hong, in the 72d year of his age. He died partly from general decay, and partly from mortification of the leg. The property left by him is said to be very considerable, and his eldest son, a mand rin of high literary rank, is now on his way to Canton from Peking, tidings of his father's ill health having been forwarded to him some time since.

IMPORTANT TO SHIP OWNERS. At the annual meeting lately held by the members of the Chamber of Commerce, it was asked, on hearing the report read of the Committee, concerning the Hong-merchants charge for securing ships, what sort of vessels were at present considered as Company's ships? The answer was—only such as report themselves as belonging to the Company.—Any ship, whatever her tonnage, reporting herself as an English ship only, is liable to a charge of $ 700, but if reported to the Macao pilot as "bah olo Company" the charge is $ 1000, thus paying $ 300 for a name.

Canton Regatta. *

The fourth meeting of the club took place yesterday and the previous day. Upon the whole it went off with less spirit, and seemed to give less satisfaction to the members, than on any previous occasion; the arrangements were far from complete—the course ill-chosen-and the attendance of visitors very small. The races however were interesting and with one or two exceptions, well contested. A sketch of their result may not prove uninteresting.

The first race which took place, was the sculling match between the Flower of Yarrow the Hoppo Go Lucky and the .... Lass. † The first mentioned boat took the lead from the beginning, and kept it with the greatest ease, the Happy Go Lucky being distanced and the B. L far astern.

The Gig race was the next pulled. The boats entered were the Gleam, Gipsy, and Comet, but the Fanny was pulled instead of the latter boat, and, it is rumoured, with two apprentices as her stroke and bow men. How far this accords with the laws of the club we are unable to say, but we have heard strong sentiments expressed on the subject. At starting the Gleam took the lead, and was evidently the favorite; but owing to some mismanagement about the oars, and being badly steered, at least so goes report, she soon lost it. The Gipsy then passed ahead and kept the lead down to the turning boat, where she was fouled by the Fanny which then gained the lead, and arrived at the winning boat about half a boat's length ahead of the Gipsy. Both boats were well pulled, but it is generally thought that had not the Gipsy been fouled she would have gained the cup. ‡

The first day's sport colsed with the "Two pair of sculls" match, between the Flower of Yarrow, the Cutty Sark and the "Flower o'Dumblane." The first boat was again the winner, but the cup was well contested by the Flower o'Dumblane which was exceedingly well pulled. The Cutty Sark stood no chance from the beginning.

The second day's sport (yesterday's) was far better than the previous day's. Every body seemed determined to be pleased, and the consequence was the spectacle was more cheering. The Cutty Sark, Louiza, Water Witch, and Flower of Yarrow were the competitors in the first race (two-oared-wherries). The Witch and Flower had the lead throughout and it is difficult to say which of the two boats was the fastest. The Witch arriving on one side of the course as the Flower did on the other; but neither of them carrying a coxswain, they missed the winning point and the cup was consequently gained by the third boat, the Louiza, which kept the best course throughout the race. The poor Cutty was well pulled, but stood no chance. This race was by far the most exciting of the whole.

Only three boats entered for the subscription Cup:—the Dolphin, § Dragon and Gipsy. As was expected the Dolphin was the winner after, however, a desperate struggle with the Dragon, which won the stakes. The Gipsy was long ahead of the Dragon and close upon the winner, but the crew evidently "fagged" before they rounded the turning boat. —This race was the last of the 4th meeting.

* Business prevented us from attending the Races ourselves, and we are obliged to a friend for this report. Much, in attending such amusements, depends upon the humour the spectator is in, to be pleased or not, and we are inclined to think that the blue devils tormented our friend on the first day, as accounts received from others, say nothing of want of attendance or spirit. Ed. C. P.

† We could not read the original, and wanted time to send for the name, not having the printed paper by us.

‡ We hear the Cup has been awarded to the Gipsy, but have as yet not seen an official report of the race.

§ The Dolphin is a Singapore built Sampan.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—We have heard of no transaction during the week but the sale of 3000 pieces fair quality grey Longcloths, @ $ 6, which exhibits a little advance, and as holders appear firm, some further improvement may be expected.

Cotton Yarn.—is again very dull—a sale of 150 bales has been reported generally of fair quality of Nos. 18 @ 34, averaging No. 26 @ 32 $. Domestics are very low.

Woollens.—Spanish Stripes, are steady at our quotations, and holders are firm, but there is no disposition to speculate at these prices. Nothing has been doing in Longells during the week, and they are heavy at our quotation of 8½ @ 8¾.

Metals.—No sales have been reported, but both Lead and Iron are saleable at present rates.

Rice.—From the weather for the present crop being so favorable, there appears little prospect of any early advance.

Straits Produce.—No alteration in Pepper: which is dull of sale at 7 @ 7½. Betelnut, has advanced during the week, and we understand that 3½ and even more is offered for an importation of 4000 piculs now at Macao. Rattans and Tin maintain their price.

Cotton.—The report of a partial failure of the Nankin crop being confirmed, there has been a demand for the Bengal staple for the Junks proceeding to Chinchew, and sales to the extent of about 5000 bales have been effected, at an advance of 3 @ 4 mace on previous prices. But the demand being supplied, the market is again quiet. Bombay has been selling steadily during the week at an advance of one to two mace. A parcel of 1280. fair quality, but with seeds, for which hitherto, we belive, only 9 T. was offered, sold a few days since at 9. 3. In Madras there has been no move whatever, it being considered high as compared with Bombay, and the quality of the season's supply very inferior. A small lot of Western fetched 7. 7 which shews a slight advance.

Opium.—The transactions continue very limited and all descriptions have consequently slightly declined. The deliveries at Whampoa are again commencing, although matters there are not entirely settled. In addition to the stock at Lintin given above, there are several vessels with considerable quantities on the East Coast, particularly of Malwa, where the prices and deliveries are reported to be by no means very encouraging. The Deliveries to the 8th. Patna old 4, new 53; Benares old 9, new 9½; Malwa 80; Total 147½ Chests.

EXPORTS.

Tea.—About 1000 Chests of Ning Yong and Ankoy Pouchong have been purchased at our quotations, probably for America. We hear also of one or two Chops of Pekoe having been bought, but these purchases cannot be considered of sufficient importance to establish a market. In Congou nothing has yet been done, purchasers holding back until the Chinese be willing to submit to such rates as the late advices from England evidently demand.

Raw Silk.—We hear of only small additions to our stock, and the Chinese show no inclination to sell at moderate prices.

Hae-nan Island.

From a Correspondent.

Every mariner who has visited the Chinese seas knows also the name of this spot, which, though accurately laid down on the charts, is as little known as if it were in the heart of Africa. There may be various reasons for this our total ignorance, but if there were professed and enterprizing travellers in China as well as in other parts of the world, many a secret would be unfolded. In the absence of this useful class of people, we must be satisfied with the native details and the accounts of some of the Roman Catholic missionaries.

The Eastern part of the island contains much arable soil, whilst the western, being intersected by mountains and overgrown with very thick jungle, furnishes little fertile ground, except towards the sea where it runs out into a flat. If we look at all the surrounding islands, we soon discover, that they greatly suffer on account of a scanty population; in Hae-nan just the contrary is the case. Since times immemorial the natives of the South west of Fokeen and East of Canton have emigrated thither and given rise to a new race, small in stature, of a cheerful disposition, and speaking a dialect resembling their own. Prolific as their ancestors, they have increased and multiplied, until there is scarcely a spot left to be appropriated to their use. But Hae nan had its inhabitants before the arrival of the colonists, and these aborigines were not overmuch delighted when they saw the new guests taking possession of their lands without ceremony. Hence strong feuds which exist to the present day, and will likely end in the total subjugation, if not extirpation, of this people. They have however taken up a very strong position in their native mountains, and more than once defied a Chinese army. Otherwise they are described as very peaceful, fond of trafficking, and ingenious in procuring the articles for barter. Many Chinese renegades have settled amongst them and found a secure asylum against oppression or avenging justice.

We wish however less to speak about the island, but rather dwell upon its inhabitants. Of the whole Chinese family that have come to the notice of foreigners, none have appeared in such amiable light as the Haenanese. They are a most sprightly set of beings, always singing and laughing and working away, as if they were going to gain a world of riches. A native of their island will toil for 16 hours, under a tropical sun, and think it quite a dainty to enjoy a few basons of rice and salt vegetables. They are skilful as agriculturists, because they have in many instances to contend with an ungrateful soil, and have moreover very little for their individual share. But they excel far more as fishermen and traders, and in these capacities, they are superior to any other tribe in the South of Asia. Go to the dreaded Paracels, and you will find there the natives of Haenan in frail barks and with very little provender, working day and night in order to obtain a cargo of salt fish. Approaching again the Eastern shores of Borneo, you will find them as busy as bees amongst the numerous rocks and islands collecting sea slug, prawns, and other marine treasures, and returning back with their rich harvest either to their own country or to Canton. Then you will again perceive them on the opposite coast of Tunkin and Cochinchina, where no other trader but they themselves would live, collecting the offals which a tyrannical Government and squalid poverty have left on the strand. But they appear to greater advantage at Laegog and the harbours of Siam. Here they are junkbuilders and exporters of rice and other necessaries of life, and make up their scanty cargo by hard labour during the four and five months of their stay. We have seen with our own eyes a small junk loaded to sinking with timber cut on the coast of Cambodia during the progress of the voyage, landing her cargo at the commencement of February, whilst the crew as numerous as white ants jumped after the floating rafters, and in the middle of May, a junk of about 400 tons, left the docks ready made and fitted with sails, anchors, cordage and all the necessary appendages, all manufactured by their own hands. During all this time the noise of hammer and axes never ceased day and night, and the speaking multitudes made as long orations as if they had been in the national convention. After having worked very hard, the whole earnings of each individual, for this is a joint stock company, amounts perhaps to 10 Dollars. With these they hasten home to their country and think themselves as happy as kings. In Singapore you may easily distinguish their junks by being very small and containing a trifling cargo. They however try to keep up a thriving trade, and to make up their want of capital by individual exertion. It is a great pity, that they do not like to settle in foreign countries, and though one may find now and then a few stragglers, there are nowhere large colonies of Haenanese. What might become of the islands of the Indian Archipelago, if these industrious men were to multiply on them as much as they have done on their natives isle! Their time may perhaps come, and Borneo be changed into one of the most flourishing spots on the wide face of the globe.

ART. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of Labezares, Saude, Ronquillo, &c. &c. from A. D. 1572 to 1594. Continued from vol. vi, No. 6. By C. R.

On the death of Legaspi, the government of the infant colony of the Philippines, devolved on Don Guido de Labezares, who pursued the course marked out by his distinguished predecessor, with equal prudence, if with less ability. He was a Biscayan, an old man, who had been in his younger days a companion of the unfortunate Villalobos. His earliest public measures were, to despatch expeditions to the provinces, northward and southward, which resulted in extending the limits and the influence of the colony.

A storm was however gathering over the Spanish settlements on Luzon, which came near to overwhelming them in total ruin. The period we have been tracing was remarkable for the boldness with which the Japanese and Chinese corsairs pushed their piratical enterprises. The government of the former country had been for a long time in great confusion, and the latter already showed some signs of the weakness which marked the downfall of the Ming dynasty. A check had, however, just been given to piracy on the Chinese coasts, not, it would appear, by any aid obtained from the Portuguese, but by the judicious employment of money, a weapon with whose edge the employers were no doubt experimentally acquainted. One of the great piratical leaders of the time—called in our authorities Limaon—was less submissive or more ambitious, and turned his eyes towards the Philippines, as a good mark for schemes of plunder or conquest. His fleet consisted of seventy junks of the largest size, carrying more than 2000 fighting men, commanded by a daring Japanese lieutenant.

De Goyti, the military commandant at Manila was confined by illness when the fleet of Limaon entered the bay, and a detachment of 600 men, headed by their Japanese leaders, rushed on the unprepared Spaniards. The light bamboo houses of which the town was then built—as its suburbs still are—were soon in a blaze, and the unfortunate De Goyti with many of his men perished, in the onset of the conflagration. The governor however rallied the inhabitants, and attacking the Chinese in their turn, drove them to their shipping. This repulse did not quash the hopes of Limaon, who invested the place a second time, on the 2nd of December. Happily, Salcedo—the ablest of the Spanish officers—who had been absent on a northern expedition, returned with his party the night before, and the troops and citizens, encouraged by the reunion, attacked the Chinese so gallantly, that they were again compelled to fly to their vessels. The piety of the Spaniards would not allow them to assume the honor of this hard-fought repulse. They rather ascribed it to the potent assistance of St. Andrew, on whose day the deliverance was effected. A public procession, with the usual holiday accompaniments, was appointed, and an annual solemnization of the same decreed, that so signal an interposition might never be forgotten *

Disheartened by the loss of so many of his men, including his Japanese lieutenant, Limaon, withdrew to the province of Pangasinan on the gulf of Lingayen and there renewed his attempts at territorial occupation; enforcing his demands on the submission of the natives, by a declaration that he had destroyed Manila. When this news reached Labezares, he detached the valiant Salcedo, by sea, to intercept and chastise the pirate. Limaon found himself blockaded in a little estuary, but eluding the vigilance of Salcedo, he escaped, by cutting a new or deepening an old and unguarded channel. Satisfied however with his Spanish antagonists, he never returned to molest the Philippines.

Manila now rose again from its ashes, under the labors of Labezares and his associates, and soon recovered its former influence over the surrounding country. Two of the most intelligent of its clergy were also sent on a mission to the governor of Fubkeen, with a message, of which Limaon and his expulsion was in part the burden.

After an administration, ad interim, of three years, Labezares was relieved in his government, by the arrival of Don Francisco Saude—anu Oidor of the Royal Audiencia of Mexico—duly appointed to succeed him. Soon after his arrival, the settlement suffered the loss of the ship Espirito Santo, with her crew and cargo, in the Straits of St. Bernardino.

In the October following (1575), the two envoys sent to Fubkeen by Labezares, returned in a Chinese vessel, accompanied by an officer, authorized to accept the propositions of the Manila government, and to frame articles of commerce. Unhappily the new incumbent did not enter into the views of his predecessor, and the Chinese envoy disgusted by the want of attention to himself, or disappointed at receiving fair words only where he had expected Mexican silver, broke off negotiations and returned to his own country. The P. Martin de Rada and another friar determined to return with him, and thus exposed themselves to a vile trick from the vindictive Chinese. After getting clear of Manila and reaching a wild part of the coast near Cape Bolinao, their servants were cruelly beaten, and the padres themselves put on shore, stripped naked, and flogged severely.

Saude did not however neglect the domestic interests of his colony. We find him soon after sending a new expedition to the southward into Camarines, and founding a provincial capital (cabezera), calling it Nueva Caceres, after his native city. He had the misfortune to lose one of his best supporters, in 1576, in the death of the gallant and successful Juan de Salcedo.

The following year, the first Franciscan missionaries reached the islands; the zeal of a lay brother—Antonio de San Gregorio—having moved the Order to send them. This humble individual, in the solitude of his convent at Lima, first conceived the design of a mission to New Guinea, and the then recently discovered Salomon's islands. He had already gone from his cell to Madrid and Rome; procured the sanction of the pope; enlisted seventeen individuals as his associates; when a royal order changed the destination of the mission to the Philippines. The new missionaries landed at Manila, the 24th June, and excited much admiration by their poor garb and pure spirit; the governor extending to them his distinguished protection, and their Augustine brethren giving them a hospitable welcome, until the liberality of the citizens provided for them a church and a convent.

The remissness of Saude in failing to cultivate a communication with the Chinese, drew on him the censure of his superiors in Mexico, as it had done that of the Manila residents. To recover from this imputation, he took advantage of a singular runaway expedition of two friars, who had been provided with a vessel, &c., by government, to go and introduce their missions into the northern parts of the island. These zealous rather than scrupulous men, after leaving Manila, betook themselves to Canton, where the expenses of their residence and of their negotiations with the local officers, quite ate up their vessel and everything on board her. They were then compelled to retire to Macao, where one of them succeeded in giving existence to a Franciscan mission, but getting into difficulties with the authorities, he was obliged to reembark, and was afterward drowned on the voyage, near the coast of Cochinchina. His companion returned to Manila, and frankly told the whole story of the truant expedition to the governor. The account reached him just at the moment when he was most anxious to demonstrate his interest in an intercourse with China, and the friar and his associates got rewards and compliments, when they were expecting what they had merited—a severe censure.

The fame of the Spanish power had now spread among the islands, and a Borneau prince—named Maleala—whose younger brother had shut him out from the succession, came in 1579, to seek succour, offering to hold his possessions as a fief of Spain and Portugal. This was too good an opportunity to be lost, and 30 vessels with a strong force, were fitted out to restore Maleala. Saude commanded in person, and was successful in placing his opponent in possession of his lost dominions. He returned safely, with some booty taken from the deposed prince; but soon after his departure from Borneo, Maleala was again driven out by his brother, who had meantime secured assistance from the Portuguese at the Moluccas.

Saude on his way home, detached Figueros to Mindanao and the Sulo islands, the natives of which were equally ready to avouch themselves vassals of Spain while he was present, and to forget their fealty on his departure.

The same year Don Gonzalo Ronquillo de Penalosa, alguasil mayor of Mexico, being in Spain, entered into an engagement with the king to transport 600 men to the Philippines, to reduce and people them, in consideration of the life government being vested in him. After losing one ship on the bar of San Lucar, Ronquillo at length embarked and arrived at Manila, via Panama, in 1580. Soon after his arrival he took up again the part of Maleala, and a second restoration of the fugitive was effected by his lieutenant Gabriel de Rivera. The new governor exerted himself further to tranquilise some disturbed districts and to put an end to the depredations of the Malay pirates. He next projected an expedition to Cagayan, the province which occupies the northern and northeastern part of Luzon. De Carrion, who commanded the detachment, found the port at the mouth of the river of Cagayan —an important stream, which penetrates far south into the interior of the island—occupied by a Japanese corsair, who was bent, it appeared, on a permanent occupation of the country. De Carrion, not daring to attack him, landed and threw up an intrenchment. His defences were hardly completed, when the Japanese rushed upon them, but the Spanish cannon were so well served and did so much execution, that after successive charges, the corsair retired to his ships, and soon after quitted the country. The Spaniards were thus left without a foreign rival in Cagayan and proceeded to secure their possession, but it was not until a later day that this region became a settled province of the colony.

Ronquillo, was fully sensible of the great advantages Manila would derive from a more certain and frequent communication with Mexico. To advance this end, he made another effort to open a southern passage; but the ship he despatched, after clearing New Guinea, was stopped by the same adverse winds, which had frustrated the expeditions of Saavedra and Villalobos. This seems to have been the last of the attempts after a southern route to Mexico; the naos, or galleons, henceforth pursuing the northern, starting in July or August, and, whenever baffled in getting beyond the Marianne islands, returning to Manila and waiting for the following season. †

The year after Ronquillo assumed the government (1582), was marked by the arrival of the first bishop of Manila, Fr. Domingo de Salazar, a Dominican, who brought with him a further supply of ecclesiastics, including two Jesuits. He was unhappily soon involved in disputes as to the extent of his official rights and privileges. Instead of dwelling on these altercations, we will only notice one decision, recorded as having been taken this year, and much more honorable to its authors—that of studying and cultivating the native dialects, as means of imparting instruction. At this early period, it is further remarked, that the Fr. Juan de Placencia had—translated the prayers and catechism into Tagalo—the dialect spoken around Manila—and prepared a grammar and vocabulary.

CHINA: its State and Prospects, with especial Reference to the Spread of the Gospel; containing allusions to the Antiquity, Extent, Population, Civilisation, Literature, and Religion of the Chinese. By W. H. Medhurst, of the London Missionary Society. London, 1838.

The author of this volume has been employed for upwards of twenty years by the London Missionary Society as a labourer in Eastern missions. The greater part of his time was spent in the Indian Archipelago, amongst the Chinese colonists settled pretty thickly throughout that region. Having in the course of his experience acquired an accurate knowledge of the customs, opinions, and language of the Chinese, he proceeded to Canton, and, assisted by the liberality of some zealous friends in the city, was enabled to make a voyage along part of the extensive coast, for the purpose of communicating with the natives on spiritual subjects, and distributing translations of the Scriptures and religious tracts. His volume contains a narrative of this voyage; a brief sketch of the British missions, which, though localized in the Indian Archipelago, have really looked to China as an ulterior object; and a general account of the Celestial Empire.

This description of its contents, however, reverses the order of the book's for China, its State and Prospects, in reality stands first; and embraces a brief disquisition on its history—an account of its statistics, civilization, government, laws, language, literature, and religion, as well as a view of the Catholic and Protestant missions to China. Some of this is the result of observation; much of it is compiled, but it is the compilation of a able man, well acquainted with his subject, and testing and enforcing the facts he derives from others by the riches of his experience. Other books upon China contain minuter expositions of each of the heads we have enumerated, and a greater number of facts: but we never read a volume that gave a more lifelike view of the Chinese people so far as it goes, or so completely pictured their internal condition. We have all heard of the industry of the Chinese, and the exertions forced upon them by a dense population. But here Mr. Medhurst increases the truth; and this is done disquisitionally, in an endeavour to show that the highest estimate of the population is not overrated, and that upwards of three hundred and fifty millions of souls obey the Emperor.

"To the fertility of the soil, we may add the consideration that it is very extensively cultivated. China contains, as has been before observed, 830,749,360 English acres; and if we allow onethird of this area for hills, rivers, marshes, and waste lands, we shall have 553,812,906 acres for cultivable land. In ascertaining this, however, we are not left to conjecture; as there exists a report made to the Emperor Keen-lung, in the year 1745, of the amount of land then under cultivation; according to which it appears, that, reckoning the land belonging to individuals with that in the possession of the Tartar standards, the military, the priests and the literary, there were at that time 505,598,224 English acres under cultivation; since which period, a new estimate has given 644,579,384 English acres as the total extent of occupied land in China. Thus it appears that more than three-fourths of the surface are waste and tilled by man; allowing, according to the highest census, nearly one acre and three quarters to each individual. The greatest part of this area is laid out exclusively in arable land, and devoted to the production of food for man alone. In China, the natives make no use of butter or cheese, and very seldom of milk; the principal animal food is pork, which is generally homefed; they have few horses for travelling, poup, or ware, and the only cattle they keep are such as are needed in husbandry: hence, there are no grazing farms, nor meadows, and very little pasture; while every acre of ground, capable of cultivation, is turned up by the spade or the plough in order to afford sustenance for the teeming inhabitants. The few beasts of burden or of draught which they keep are either tethered to a string by the side of the road, or turned out to graze on the hills; while they are supplied by night with a little straw or bean-stalks, which is also their principal food during the winter. A common is quite unusual throughout the Eastern half of China; while parks and pleasure-grounds are proportionably scarce, as the anxiety to satisfy the appetite prevails over the desire of amusement.

"The industry and skill of the Chinese, striving to produce as many of the necessaries of life as possible, would also argue a dense population, ever struggling against threatening want, and compelled to exert themselves for their daily bread. In tropical climates, where the ground is fertile and the population scanty, the natives find that by a few months' labour they can produce sufficient food for a whole year's consumption, and are therefore indisposed to exert themselves further. But in China, the inhabitants are incessantly employed; and every individual is obliged to be busy in contributing his quota to the common weal. Every one in the least acquainted with the manners of the Chinese knows that they are untiring in their exertions to maintain themselves and families. In the business of agriculture they are more particularly active, raising two crops from the ground every year, extending their cultivation in every possible direction, and bringing the most unpromising spots into use, in order that nothing may be lost. Their skill in effecting these objects is not, considering their few advantages, contemptible. They thoroughly understand the importance of varying the crops; they know perfectly well the seasons and soils adapted for certain productions; and they are fully sensible of the importance of manuring the ground in order to maintain its fertility. A stranger is struck with this on first setting his foot on the shores of China. Almost every individual met with in the paths and fields is provided with a basket and a rake; and every evening the cottager brings home a certain quantity to add to the mest heap, which is a most important appendage to every dwelling. Having but few sheep and cattle, they are obliged to make the most of the stercoraceous stock of men and swine. This is carefully collected, and actually sold at so much per pound; while whole strings of city scavengers may be seen cheerily posting into the country every successive morning with their carried acquisitions, little heeding the olfactory nerves of the less interested passengers. Every other substance likely to answer the end is anxiously collected and carefully disposed, so as to provide for future exigencies; such as decayed animal and vegetable matter, the sweepings of streets, the mud of canals, burnt bones, lime, and, what is not a little singular, the short stumpy human hair, shaven from millions of heads every ten days, is industriously gathered up, and sold for manure throughout the empire."

* The 'San Andres' day has been continued down to the present time though many who mingle in its festivities, particularly among the strangers who share in the dance at the 'palacio,' may have forgotten, or never known the brave deliverance commemorated.

† It should be mentioned that as early as 1573, an English pilot, Philip Tonson (Thomson), a resident at Manila, had taken a ship, owned by merchants of the place, to San Blas by the southern route; ascending as high as 38° or 39° S. latitude, and discovering, on the way, several islands. The viceroy of Mexico and the king of Spain complimented the navigator on his successful voyage, but he did not live long enough to follow up his discoveries, or to enjoy the ran andk pay conferred on him. Those who came after him, seem to have wanted the skill and hardihood, to profit by the experience he had gathered.

This subject is further continued in the,

Economies of Dress and Rooms.—"In their dress, the Chinese are alike anxious to economize the soil. Barrow says, that 'an acre of cotton will clothe two or three hundred persons;' and as cotton can be planted between the rice crops, and thus vary the productions and relieve the soil, the Chinese prefer such clothing as they can raise at the least expense of ground and labour. Were the hundreds of millions of China to be clothed in woollens, an immense tract of grazing land would be required, which would deduct materially from the area devoted to food, and greatly exceed what the Chinese could afford. In their dwellings, likewise, they are particularly frugal of room; living together in a very small compass, and crowding into closely-built cities, as though ground with them were an object of great moment. A room twenty feet square would afford sufficient space for a dozen people to eat, drink, work, trade, and sleep; while the streets of their towns and cities are so narrow that it is quite possible to touch each side of the way with the hand as you pass along. Now if we compare this frugality with the extravagance of European nations in regard to room,—living on beef and mutton, and wearing woollen clothes,—we may easily see that the ground which would sustain one Englishman would be sufficient for the support of three or four Chinese. Amongst such a selfish and sensual people so much economy would not be observed did not stern necessity compel; and what greater necessity can exist than the difficulty of sustaining a crowded population from a contracted soil?"

Mr. Medhurst's account of the different missions to the Eastern Archipelago and China are brief, but sufficient, and contain some incidental points to which we shall presently refer. The narrative of his voyage along the coast is lively and informing; though perhaps it adds little to our general knowledge, beyond what the trips of Gutzlaff and Lindsay, have left. Where he landed, he mostly found the people willing, and very often anxious to receive the books he gave away; but whether all were stimulated by the desire of reading them, may be questioned, for even in the Missionary's brief sojourns he saw some of the volumes he had just distributed exposed for sale in a shop. Individually, a few of the public officers were liberal in their views; but as a body, the laws of the empire rendered them all averse to the Missionary's intercourse with the natives. The display of this aversion varied, according to the natural disposition of the authorities and the strength at their command, from subterfuge to argument and remonstrance, with an occasional disposition to passive resistance. But they were universally civil and forbearing, be their motives fear or what they might. The perseverance and diplomatic skill displayed in the following passage may be admired, and everybody must admit the excellent disposition of the Missionary Societies and the propriety of their objects. But we doubt the political prudence of these trips, in the present delicate state of our commercial relations with the court of Pekin, and that too in an empire so vast, so civilized—with a local government so well organized that the visit of our author to one part of the coast was known at his next landing-place before his arrival.

From the National Intelligencer of yesterday.

THE SPECIE CIRCULAR REPEALED!

Our readers will learn, we doubt not, most of them with great satisfaction, that the joint resolution repealing, in effect, the Treasury Order of July, 1836, and prohibiting the Executive from making any discriminating and partial orders concerning Government money in time to come, which passed the Senate on Tuesday evening, passed the House of Representatives yesterday almost with the swiftness of an arrow, and now needs only the President's signature to be a law. The unexampled majorities in both Houses show the strength of the general dislike justly entertained against this celebrated circular.

Here is the end, then, of one experiment, and most sincerely do we rejoice at it. We congratulate the country that Congress, in so decisive a manner, has extinguished one of those measures which have so much annoyed and distressed the community.

It is remarkable with what pertinacity the executive has withstood public sentiment in regard to this pernicious measure. The solicitations of friends, and the reiterated decisions of Congress, have alike been unavailing to produce its repeal. Three-fourths of the members of the last Congress pronounced its condemnation by the bill of February, 1837, which Gen. Jackson put in his pocket, and would neither sign nor return it to Congress that it might be passed into a law without his signature. Then there was the sub-Treasury bill of the extra session, which passed the Senate, and which contained a clause repealing the specie circular.

Next, there is the sub-Treasury bill of this session, which has also passed the Senate, containing (in its 23d section) a similar rescinding clause, moved by Mr. Webster. And now, here is the joint resolution, in the identical terms of that section, substituted by the Senate, on motion of the same gentleman, for the proposition of Mr. Clay, which has received the sanction of overwhelming majorities in both Houses. Thus has the Senate four different times, and the House of Representatives twice, declared in effect that this Jacksonian experiment No. 3 ought not only to be revoked, but that it ought to be made unlawful for the Executive ever hereafter to issue or authorize any similar order. Yet, up to this moment, has the Executive clung to the measure, regardless of the injury which even his partisans know that it inflicts on the country; regardless of the public will, most emphatically spoken through the Representatives of the people.

Yes, clung to it with a tenacity which is totally unaccountable upon any other hypothesis than that the Executive will has been controlled by some "malign influence," either proceeding from the Hermitage, or exerted here by the original concoctors and advisers of the measure. To that as it may, that fate of the "experiment" is sealed. The odious and unconstitutional discrimination must now be given up. Congress has pronounced its fate in a voice that must be heard, and with a unanimity that leaves no hope to its friends, even from the VETO.

Blameable, however, as we hold the President, for adhering with such obstinacy to this oppressive measure, which he could at any moment have abrogated, with a dash of the pen, it must be admitted, in candor, that he has only acted in accordance with the solemn pledge which he gave, on entering upon his high trust, "to tread in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor;" and those who approve of such pledges, under any circumstances, must award him praise for the fidelity with which he has redeemed that pledge.

He has certainly "trod in the footsteps" as long as he could, though they have led him through a thorny path. General Jackson's popularity, it was arrogantly asserted by his admirers, "could stand any thing." A sad popularity it has been to the country! Fortunately, though he left his obnoxious measures as a legacy to the incumbent of the Presidency, he could not bequeath with it that popularity by which he was enabled to sustain them, and trample in the dust the acts of the people's Representatives.

LORD BROUGHAM'S REVIVAL.—Lord Brougham now dresses rather smartly. Until the commencement of the present session, he was seldom to be seen, since his return from his Scottish tour in 18 6, without his tartan trousers and waistcoat. He is said to have bought as much cloth when in Inverness as would make a dozen pairs of the first and a dozen of the last. Now he has put them aside, at least for a time, and appears in cloth of a more usual kind. At present he is partial to having his waistcoats made in such a way as to button close up to his chin. On his breast is displayed a very handsome gold chain. This chain, however, does not, as is usual in such cases, answer the purposes of a watch-guard; for it has no connexion with his watch. His watch-pocket is in the old-fashioned part of his wardrobe, not in his wais coat; and its locality is indicated by a riband about three inches in length, which suspends a trio of the most massive watch-seals which ever regaled the eyes of those who are partial to such articles of jewellry. His Lordship has a most decided antipathy to showing the collar of his shirt; and not less great is his aversion to fashionable stocks, or any thing which would give him what is called a stiff neck. His neckerchief is of black silk, and is always put on loosely and carelessly. Great as is the dread with which the Tory Peers regard Lord Brougham, I am convinced they would rather run the risk of an occasional onslaught from him, than see him again out of the House. Before his absence in the session of 1836, I believe they felt differently. He had so assailed them in the previous sessions since his transplantation from the Commons to their House, that I believe their unanimous wish was that he were again out of it; but having encountered the dulness of 1836, in consequence of his absence. I am persuaded that they are now rejoiced at his presence, even though the price of the entertainment he affords them be often a regular onset at themselves. While wielding the cudgel with such extraordinary effect at Ministers' expense, on the memorable night in which he assailed their Canadian despatche and Canadian policy, the Tory Peers evidently enjoyed the scene as a luxury of the most exquisite kind. They all laughed with a frequency and heartiness which are quite rare in that House. Indeed, Lord Crougham is almost the only man I ever saw create a cordial laugh in that locality.—(Random Recollections.)

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,—In looking over the account of the late Regatta, given in your valuable paper of the 10th inst I was sorry to find that you had not yourself been a spectator of the scene, for, the garbled, false, and unsatisfactory statement of your contributor, would had those present to imagine, that he was not himself a witness of what he has attempted to describe; The official report, will of course appear in the columns of your Cotemporary, and I should think, that, after you have made enquiry at the proper source, you will be induced in a future Paper to apologise for your injustice to the many respectable members of the C. R C., whom you have thus unwittingly slandered by inserting misrepresentations, a originating, no doubt, in the morbid, and, perhaps, dessappointed feelings, of your Correspondent, signed.

SPECTATOR.

Dear Sir,

I send you a fragment of Chinese poetry, and if it interests you, and you can pardon my attempt at versifying the translation, I shall probably soon send you another.

Yours truly,
P. S.

Translation.

The distant drums now told the second watch,
And yet he came not; no step was heard without,
Save the dull pacing watchman's, to repay,
The weary listener. "And is he false?" she cried,
"Can he forget my sister's marriage day,
"When evening closed upon the dull carouse,
"He sought the arbor in the moon-lit grove,
"To meet poor me? Alas! Alas! he is but man;
"And memory which has stamped upon my heart,
"In marble lines that night's fond recollection,
"Him leaves unscared.—All nature was so still,
"That e'en the crawling make I heard,
"Rustling the shrinking leaves. The moon,
"Smiled joyous on the scene, and music's aid,
"Alone was wanting to complete thy bliss, I took,
"From off its shelf my maid's guitar, and struck,
"Its willing chords, while thus I sung:—

"I love to wander forth when evening dews
"Refresh the air and bathe the thirsty ground,
"When twilight mellows nature's vivid hues,
"And casts its magic influence around.
"How happy could I be with him to roam,
"Who holds his empire in this trembling heart,
"More happy still to grace our blissful home.
"Never, he dies from his embrace to part."
"No sooner had the song escaped my lips,
"Than shame and fear by turns assumed their sway:
"For how can modest maid so far forget,
"Her soul's uprightness and her chastity of thought,
"Without a blush? Guiltless but yet indecorous,
"My tears flowed fast. * * * A footstep,
"In the distant path disturbed my reverie,
"And called again carnations to my cheek,
"For love now whispered that the coming step,
"Was his. He stepped beneath my lattice,
"And while with skilful hand he struck the chords,
"Of his guitar, in gentle strains he sung:—
"'The pearly peach bloom mantles on her brow,
"'And glow-worm's brightness sparkles in her eye,
"'When others breathe their love; when they adore
"'She pays their homage with a tender sigh.
"'But me—her lover and devoted slave—
"'She kills with coldness: and repays with scorn;
"'The tender offerings of a maid doing love,
"'Which soon will carry me to life's sad bourn.'"
"'I'll seek me out a deep and generous stream,
"'And there I'll sleep 'npon its sandy bed,
"'There of her heartless cruelty I'll dream,
"'Happy if one small tear for me is shed.'"
"My sobs disturbed him, and he sang no more,
"But bounding up the steps, my lover stood,
"Before me."

Saturday, 17th Nov.

The only arrival during the week has been the French Ship Eucharis, from Manila, 31st October. The following vessels had arrived there from this; 24th, Mangles; 26th, Hortensia, Mermaid; 27th, Ellen; 28th, Fort Williiam, Layton; 31st, Duchess of Northumberland, Bencoolen. The Young Queen, Atkins, from Hobarttown, arrived at Manila on the 26th.

We have inserted the letter from a Correepondent concerning the last Regatta, not with an intention, as he advises, to "apologize to the many respectable members" for our injustice and slander, but as a proof of our impartiality in the matter. The official report of the races we have not been able to obtain,† and all we know about the meeting is the account we published last week as received from a friend; if that was wrong, our new Correspondent ought to have pointed out why and where. It is really a novel thing, to require of us to go and enquire after the heads of our offending, ignorant as we are of all offence.—Our Correspondent leaves us altogether in the dark on the subject, and we think that it was for him, and not for us, to bring forward the evidence that was to convict us of injustice and slander—such is at least the common practice, and never did we hear that a defendent was called on to procure evidence for his prosecutor.

We again call the attention of our readers to Mr. Dempster's letter and to the diagram that accompanies it concerning the new rig he proposes.

We have given part of a Review from the Spectator on the Rev. Mr. Medhurst's new book on China. We shall give the remainder in our next. Its writer is evidently well acquainted with affairs in China, and we cordially concur in most of his remarks.

We are yet enabled to notice the arrival of the Omega from Singapore 19th October, by which we have received the Sing. Free Press of 13th, (that of the 11th has not yet come to hand) from it we notice the following arrivals from China: Lady Grant, Mary Frazier, Emily Jane, H. M. S. Wellesley and Algerine, Forth, Lowjee Family, Edmundstone, Catherine Cornelia, and Allalevie. We also hear that the Sir Herbert Compton, and the Kellie Castle had arrived at Singapore. The Orwell, from Madras arrived there on the 11th, and sailed again for China on the 16th October. The schooner Frederick Huth, from the Cape and Mauritius, bound for China also arrived at Singapore on the 18th, also the here long expected Vincent had arrived there, bound we are told, to Penang, before proceeding her voyage to China. This vessel left London in the middle of May, and there is now some hope of her arrival in China before the New Year. We notice in the Free Press some interesting remarks on the projected colonization by the English of Port Essington, which we shall probably give in our next.

We have just received the Umpire's report of the two Regattas, the first of which came off on Thursday and Friday last week, and the second (the sailing match) on Thursday last. We witnessed the latter, which was a very well contested race, though, unfortunately, the boats, having, on their return, to contend against the tide, and a head wind, reached the winning post sometime after the run had gone down, and the spectators lost consequently much of the expected gratification.

Umpires Report.

FOURTH MEETING.

First day, November, 8th 1838.

Scullers.	Time.
Won by the Flower of Yarrow	10. 24
Battersea Lass	11. 20

A well contested Race, though the pullers were not very equally matched, and think is might have proved more interesting had the Pearl taken her place, at starting.

4 oared Gigs.	Time.
1st. the Comet	13. 2
2nd. the Gipsy	13. 6
3rd. the Gleam

A capital Race throughout, the 'Comet' having struck the Gipsy on the larboard quarter in turning and an objection having been raised that she had thereby impeded her way, the Cup was awarded to the Gipsy The Gleam, the favorite at starting, was decidedly badly steered and I believe it was fully their intention of winning the cup, but as disputes arise in the best regulated families, so it appears, it was with the crew of the Gleam, which lost them, no doubt, the race.

2 Pair Sculls.	Time.
Won by the Flower of Yarrow	8. 44
Flower of Dunblane	9 2

The owner of the Yarrow again triumphant, and give him much credit in the use of his Sculls.

Second Day.

Two oared Wherries.

	Time.
Won by the Louisa	7. 17.

This was a very interesting race from the number of boats that started, and they really did their best, however, in the anxiety to win, few looked for the course, and, no doubt, many disappointments, took place in numerous backers, for the head most boat took the wrong course, and the winning had nearly given up to the hitherto fortunate Flower of Yarrow.

BOATS OF ALL CLASSES.

For Suscription Cup,	Time
Won by the Dolphin 5 oared Sampan	14. 4.
2nd Dragon 4 oared Gally	14. 19.
3rd Gipsy 4 oared Gig	14. 27.

The best race of the meeting, a capital start, and all doing their best, to the turning Boat, when the Dolphins began their play, and came in the winning boat in handsome style.

IAN SCOTT.
Umpire C. R, C.

SAILING MATCH.

Entrance $10 with $25 from the fund for a prize plate, value $65.

The following boats started and timed at passing and returning to the Umpire's Boat.

1st Salamander,	Orange,	1.	49. 50.
2nd Weazel,	Red,	1.	54. 41.
3rd Mouse,	White,	1.	59. 01.
4th Perret,	Green,	2.	1. 37.
5th Rat,	Blue,	2.	5. 41.

This was a well contested race and had slid ropes been provided for the boats, it would have been a pretty race from the first start. The ebb making, the boats came in long after sunset, yet much credit is due to the seamanlike manner the boats were worked up against a strong ebb tide. The Salamander's taking the palm, is much to be attributed to the able manner in which she was managed.

DIED.

At Whampoa, on Thursday the 8th November, on board the Viscount Melbourne, — Mr. SAMUEL STANSBURY, second Officer of that Ship.

At Manila on the 22nd October Mrs. MARY CATHERINE STRACHAN, the beloved Wife of JAMES STRACHAN Esq, deeply regretted by all her friends.

* Those two sails possess a double advantage to any others of a former plan as they go right round without interfering with the mast. What is termed booms will be more properly termed yards, as they are fast by the middle in a swivel, and have got lifts from each yard-arm to a swivel at the mast heads, which is so fitted that the yards may go round and round without fouling the haulyards with the lifts.

† We have since received, and now publish it.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—We have heard of no transactions of any importance during the week, in either LONGCLOTHS or COTTON YARNS, and the market generally continues very languid.

WOOLLENS.—For good SPANISH STRIPES, 1.35 @ 1.40 could be obtained, but holders are demanding an advance on these prices. A sale of 2000 pieces LONGELLS, of a good quality, by a Chinese, is reported at not better than 8½

METALS.—No material alteration in price or demand, there being no accession to the stock.

RICE.—continues low, with a favorable crop.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, is in little better demand. BETELNUT, a sale of about 4000 piculs is reported at Macao, of good quality, at better than 3¾. TIN from the short stock has advanced, particularly BANCA, and the first moderate supply will fetch our quotation. RATTANS, continue as before.

COTTON.—The brisk demand noticed in our last has entirely ceased and the price of Bengal has again receded 2 @ 3 mace. About 9000 Bales of Bengal were disposed of about 4000 bales of good quality at 10. 6. and the remainder at 9. 2 @ 3 for Cutchoura—Jalone 9. 7 @ 10—and Banda 10 5. 7000 Bales also of Bombay were sold at about our quotations, consisting principally of the middling descriptions. The price of Bombay is maintained, but the dealers are fully supplied for the present. For Madras there has been no enquiry, and the only transaction is a small sale of 1 @ 200 bales of good quality Tinnevelly @ 10 T.

OPIUM.—The market has declined since our last for all descriptions—several parties being anxious to realize. The principal deliveries are by the foreign schooners on the RIVER, which have been, it is said, brisk during the week, but one or two of them have, we hear been attacked while attempting to deliver Opium off the Factories, and a few bags seized, and wounds given and received, but we have been unable to obtain particulars. An Edict is reported to have arrived from Peking enjoining the severest restrictive measures against the Opium trade, and denouncing death to all smokers as well as dealers 3 months after its promulgation. It may only prove one of the usual empty threats, but it is, we know, causing some sensation among the Chinese, and in the northern Provinces accounts have been received of serious interruption to the trade.

EXPORTS.

TEA.—We have nothing new to report. The market remains inactive.

RAW SILK.—The holders do not appear inclined to reduce their demands, and nothing has been done.

ART. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of Labezares, Sande, Ronquillo, &c.; from A. D. 1573 to 1594. Continued from vol vi, No. 6. By C. R.

The intelligence now reached Manila of the union of the crowns of Spain and Portugal, and the governor despatched the Jesuit Fr. Alonzo Sanches to inform the authorites of Macao, and to receive their oath of allegiance to Philip II. P. Sanches reached Macao in May 1582, and after spending some time in preparing the minds of the citizens for the change, he succeeded in securing their quiet submission. It is added that no public rejoicings or demonstration, of loyalty took place on this occasion, because they were in a strange country, and were afraid of awakening suspicion on the part of the Chinese. The object of this mission happily accomplished, P. Sanchez sought to return to Manila His own vessel being embargoed, he took passage via Japan, but was wrecked on the coast of Formosa. Returned once more to Macao, he was so fortunate as to find a conveyance to the Philippines, where he was received with great distinction by the governor and his fellow citizens.

The difficulties the P. Sanchez met with in getting back from his mission are among the very many evidences, in the accounts of this period, of the miserable state of communications between the ports of Eastern Asia. The following year, we meet with another. The nao of that season (1583) put in to Macao, on account of some mutinous conduct in her crew, and the factor was obliged to come over from Manila to recover the vessel and give her a new despatch for Acapulco This done, he reembarked, but meeting with bad weather, was driven out of his course and brought up at Malacca! It was late the next year, before he got back to Macao.

The life government, for which Ronquillo had bargained, proved but a short possession. After three years of weak health, he died and great preparations were made to give him honorable burial. On the ninth day, a funeral ceremony was celebrated, in the church of the Augustines, in the midst of which, the decorations of the church took fire, and all attempts to arrest the flames were ineffectual. The church itself, the palace, cathedral, and half the city, became the funeral pyre of the deceased Ronquillo.

His relative and successor ad interim, Don Diego Ronquillo, was compelled to give his first attention to the rebuilding of the half ruined city. Before this was accomplished, Don Santiago de Vera arrived, as president of the newly constituted Royal Audiencia,' and finding Ronquillo dead, assumed the governorship. By his direction, aid was sent to the Tidoreans, and a stone-fortification — planned by P. Sedeno—was erected for the first time at Manila, and planted with common cast by a native Indian.

It was now thought desirable that the state of the colony—its commercial nad political conditions its religious disquietudes, &c.—should be brought before the king and cortes; and P. Alonzo de Sanches, who had acquired reputation by his mission to Macao, was unanimously deputed to perform this office. He left Manila in June 1586; and arrived at Seville in September 1587. His reports of the progress of the Philippine misson were received with much interest at a time when it was warmly debated in the Spanish universities, whether the Evangelisation of the Indians in the colonies ought to be conducted on the apostolic model — without staff or scrip—or with the aid of modern and carnal weapons. One singular argument of the day for assigning to the missionary a military escort, seems to have been drawn from the parable of the supper in Luke XIV; the inference from which was—that it was proper to proceed by invitation with the great, but lawful to use force with the common people!

In the political circles, the accounts and propositions of P. Sanches were also received with great interest. After a close investigation and discussion, it was resolved that the colony should be strenuously supported. As it happened, the P. Sanches repaired to the Escurial, to receive the king's commands, on the day when the tidings came of the destruction of the armada, which had been commissioned to humble the pride of Elizabeth. Notwithstanding this disastrous news, Philip gave audience to the padre, examined his statements, and evinced his interest in them, by increasing the proposed allowance for royal charity in the islands.

The long and minute regulations which were soon after drawn up and approved by his majesty evinced the same sincere desire, that the laws and their administration should be just and pure, both toward the Spanish residents and the native population. One provision may be mentioned, as singularly honorable to a monarch of that day, viz., that the native previously enslaved should be set at liberty, and that the Indians themselves should not be suffered to prolong the miserable practice of reducing one another to bondage.

Among the affairs entrusted to P. Sanchez one of the most important was,—the acquisition of a proper governor for the colony, its great distance making it so dependent on him for its prosperity. The qualifications insisted on by the friar, were so many and so singular, that we are fain to join, though at a late day, in the smile with which they are said to have been received by one of the principal ministers of Philip II. Beside the usual finesses,—he was to be neither a youth nor an old man—unmarried and without children—neither in debt nor a creditor—neither avaricious nor profuse —of great courage and tried prudence -a frank and humane cavalier—and above all, a pattern of piety. Such a person—despite the smile of the worthy minister—the P. Sanchez found or thought he had found, in Don Gomez Perez das Marinas, a Gallician knight—who after the proper representations, was accordingly appointed to the governorship. These arrangements took up the interval to 1589, when the P. Sanchez went to Rome, inrending to return and join the suite of the new governor, before he should embark for the colony. His first audience was with Sixtus V., but, that pope dying soon after, it was not till the accession of Gregory XIV. that he obtained the desired briefs, bulls, &c. It was then that the treasured merits of the holy see were poured forth in so singular a profusion of indulgences, that nothing but utter neglect or wilfulness could any more detain the souls of the fortunate Filipinos long in purgatory. He obtained for his own order, that of the Jesuits, the erection of their house at Manila into a college, and when he came to give his advice as to the sending further missionaries, he recommended, that they should be young in years to fit them for the acquisition of languages, but old in prudence and the control of the passions; humble, laborious, willing to confine themselves to the Philippines, without wandering to China, Japan, &c.; and ready to forswear all return to Europe. Detained himself at Rome, and afterwards in Spain for the settlement of difficulties in the Jesuit Order, Sanches could not accompany Das Marinas to his government. Nor did he ever fulfil his intention to follow, death overtaking him shortly after at Alcala

Meanwhile, De Vera continued to preside very satisfactorily over the affairs of the colony. Some severe losses fell however on Manila, in the capture of one rich nao, by an English privateer, and in the destruction of two large ships by a tempest, when about to sail for Acapulco.

In September 1590, Das Marinas with his son and some Jesuit friars, sailed from San Lucas and arrived safely at Manila, via Mexico. His arrival made an important change in the administration of the colonial affairs, the audiencia, which had a considerable share of power, being removed entirely. This alteration was made, on the representation, that so remote and tender a settlement needed to be presided over by a military person, rather than a judicial body. The fortifications of Manila were now strengthened, and a solid stone wall was built around the city. A regiment, 400 strong, was raised, barracks built, and the citizens relieved from billets and guard duty. Provision was also made for the daughters of soldiers, by founding a college for them; the cathedral was restored, and a public market opened. The provinces shared the care of the governor, and his best efforts were made to equip more vessels, in order to keep up a better communication with Mexico.

The long and miserable contest which had gone on between the Spaniards and Portuguese for the trade in spices, the one party leaguing with the raja of Ternate and the other with Tidore, ceased in a great measure, with the union of 1580. But a new enemy was entering the field, and we now (1591) hear of the Dutch in the Banda sea, and of their stirring up the Ternateans, &c., to exclude the Portuguese. Gia being so far off, an appeal was made to Manila, and Das Marinas prepared to render the required assistance. The armament collected on this occasion consisted of 1000 Spanish and 400 native troops, with 4-0 Chinese sarcumen, embarked on board of 100 vessels of all sizes. After receiving at Manila the formal homage of the raja of Siao (?), Das Marinas set out from Cavite, Oct. 16th 1593, with two or three galliys, to join the armament at Zebu. He was not destined to proceed far on this unfortunate expedition. The Chinese boatmen, fatigued by pulling against adverse winds, and excited by the sight of the military chest, rose at night (Oct. 25th) on the careless guard, and of eighty who composed the governor's suite, but eighteen escaped. Thus perished the able and active Das Marinas, at the outset of an expedition which his discretion would probably have made the instrument of extending, very considerably, the Spanish power in the Eastern Archipelago. The successful Chinese made sail for their own country, but being driven by gales to the Cochinchinese coast, they fell into the hands of the government, which stripped them of the whole of their ill-gotten plunder.

The news of this fatal event was carried to Manila by a survivor, and thence transmitted to Don Luis Perez das Marinas, the son of the deceased governor,—who was waiting in command of the armament, at Zebu. The loss of the military chest, and the exposed state of the capital in the event of further misfortunes, induced Don Luis to give up the enterprise and return to Manila, where he assumed the chief authority, as his father's successor.

CHINA: its State and Prospects, with especial Reference to the Spread of the Gospel; containing Allusions to the Antiquity, Extent, Population, Civilization, Literature, and Religion of the Chinese. By W. H. Medhurst. of the London Missionary Society. London, 1938.

"We pushed on in our course, till we came to a row of houses which lined the beach, and had just proceeded through one small street, when the arrival of the chief mandarin and his retinue was announced; on looking round, we saw the officers landing from the boat, and found it necessary to halt, in order to receive them in a proper manner. The police runners made way for their superiors, by beating amongst the crowd, right and left, in a most unceremonious manner; and then we could perceive three or four well-dressed and well fed gentlemen walking up the beach with a dignified air towards us. The officer in attendance pointed to his superiors, and wished us to go down to the beach to meet them; but we thought it more suitable to stand where we were, and await their approach. On a nearer view, we found that one of them was adorned with a light blue button on his cap, while the rest wore flowered gold buttons, as the badges of their office. The first of these was ascertained to be a tsan-tseang, or sub-colonel; the second was a civil mandarin, from the district of Wan-tang, about twenty miles off, and the rest were subalterns.

"When they approached, the civil mandarin became the chief speaker; and, putting on a stern countenance, asked us, in an angry tone, from whence we came and what was our business? We told him to what country we belonged, and said that our object was to do good, by distributing books and distributing medicines. He suggested that we should put off to one of the junks in the harbour, and hold a conference on the subject; which we promised to do after our books were distributed. Having said this, we made a move, and took a few steps inland. They then placed themselves between us and the town, and said that we could not be permitted to proceed in that direction. The ground on which we trod was the Celestial Empire; and the Emperor who commanded all under heaven had given strict orders that no foreigners should be allowed to go a single step into the interior. We said, if this were the Celestial Empire, and comprised all under heaven, then we, as dwelling under heaven, were subjects of the Emperor, and entitled to his protection; we should therefore proceed but a little way and return.

"Here they took hold of our hands, and said that they could not allow us to proceed, as it was absolutely forbidden by the laws. Upon which we remonstrated against their rude behaviour; and said, that those laws were made for lawless people and robbers, who would injure and destroy all they came near, but we were civil and peaceable persons, who came to do no harm, and designed to effect as much good as possible. With this they softened their tone, and said that they were far from thinking ill of us or our intentions; but such were the commands of their superiors, which they had no power to alter, and dared not disobey. Finding them a little pacified, we said that the open beach, surrounded by a dense crowd, was not a proper place for gentlemen to converse on matters of business; and the least they could do would be to invite us into a house, and present us with a little tea and confectionary, when we might talk over these affairs in a proper way. To this the colonel replied, that we might go to the temple hard by, and sit a while. The civil officer opposed this sternly, saying that it would be very improper to allow us any indulgence. We, however, caught at the old gentleman's word, and said. 'To the temple, to the temple!' and the crowd, re-echoing the expression, made way for us to pass, while some of them showed the way.

"The temple was situated on a rising ground, a little above the village; and we proceeded with a quick pace towards it. On arriving, we found that we were considerably before the mandarins, and that a path-way lay before us which led further up into the country; so without appearing to notice the temple, or to heed the loud cries of the people, we walked on, with stoical indifference and rapid strides, till we left the mandarins, policemen, crowd, and all, far in the rear; and kept on, never halts and farms, to the foot of a hill; this we ascended, and nearly gained the summit before we allowed to look round on the world below. One of the policerunners, with great difficulty, kept up with us, complaining of our rapid pace and unusual course. By degrees, one and another of his brethren came in sight, out of breath but not of patience; and, sitting down by us, asked us very pleasantly and familiarly, if we liked the appearance of the country, and whether the prospect here say resemblance to the scenery of our native land?"

If these roving expeditions were likely to accomplish their object, the merely prudential view might be blown a-hie; but it is very doubtful whether China, in its existing circumstances, is likely to furnish a harvest for the Christian missionary. With a favourable Government, and the influence which springs from moral power, very little has been done in India. In China both these are against us. The Government is hostile to Christianity and its teachers, if native; and if foreign, additionally hostile as foreigners. Though the people may admire our superiority in certain points, yet on the whole they look down upon us as barbarians—pretty much, perhaps, as an old John Bull looked down upon a Frenchman. We cannot instruct the Chinese in the arts of living, as we have instructed the savages of the South Seas; for in many of these arts they excel us. We cannot impress them with a general notion of intellectual superiority; because their habits, associations, literature, and criticism, are so different from ours, that they cannot without great difficulty be comprehended by the mass, and not relished by the most learned and enlarged-mind. The Chinese are a generally educated people,—at least, education is far more widely diffused than in England; and they are quick and apt in argument. Their apathy or scepticism, too, opposes an almost insuperable obstacle. It is not indeed strictly true, as some divines allege, that the Chinese are a nation of Atheists; for each of their three religions inculcates some sort of theology, and allows or requires some ceremonial forms to the memory of ancestors, or the incarnated powers of nature. The people, however, are so far practically Atheists, that they consider the "be all and the end all, here," denying all future states of existence, or rather, deeming it too visionary and vague for consideration; "not knowing the state of the living," said Confucious to a too speculative disciple, "how can you know the state of the dead?" And the main article of the most superstitious sect is, that "every thing will finally be resolved into nothing." Another bar is the national character,—shrewd and worldly in itself, and rendered more so by the incessant struggle in which each man is involved for subsistence, or for station, every post in China depending upon personal merit; and which qualities, when engaged with the most accomplished diplomatists of Europe, sometimes come off victorious, even without making allowance for European biases or habits of judgment. The very language is at present against us. It is supposed that no Chinese word conveys the Jewish or Christian idea of God; the term used denoting a "spirit or intelligence." Neither can sin in a theological sense be conveyed to the understanding, its substitute being "crime;" so that those who are free from Chinese notions of crime, when they can be persuaded to consider the subject at all, meet it as Sinne by "I do not need a Saviour."

Present experience confirms these views. Medhurst and Gutzlaff both own that, in China Proper, though they were frequently listened to, few were impressed; the people interrupted the discourse in its most important parts with some secular question, or it was found, by subsequent conversation, that whilst the Missionary had been aiming at saving their souls, the soul had been ravishing the teacher's garments. In the Indian Archipelago, amongst the Chinese settlers, the progress hitherto made has been small, notwithstanding the advantages of long time and constant opportunity. Devoid of the strong religious feelings which prevail in the United Kingdom, the Chinese will send their children to any school, and let them learn any thing. It appears that they do not even object to pay towards education establishment; and they contribute with tolerable liberality to hospitals. But few converts have been made among the youth; and the adults generally oppose to all attempts a philosophical or a vulgar indifference. The majority of the so-called converts appear to look at the Scriptures with curiosity as a system of theology, or with admiration as a speculative code of morals, excellent but impracticable. If occasionally a more zealous partizan takes up he cudgels against the Christians, he wields them, Mr. Medhurst admits, rather skilfully, in the judgment of the Chinese.

We will support these facts by a few extracts. Here is part of a dialogue with a Confucian, who began rather angrily, in consequence of an attack upon the merits of the great founder of his sect—

"At length, softening down, he said, 'I see, Sir, that your anxiety to instruct the Chinese originates in a kind intention; but your books are filled with a few cunning remarks on an obtruse subject, mixed up with much that is unfounded. Our ancient philosophers taught the doctrine of filial piety, but left the mysterious subject of spiritual beings alone, as not intimately connected with the happiness of the people. In your books, every expression tends to this point; while the duties of the human relations are seldom referred to. This is neglecting the important and caring about the insignificant. Confucius cautioned men against paying too much attention to religious ceremonies, and forbade their flattering the gods to procure protection; but if ignorant people will buy themselves off by begging for blessings, they only squander their own time and money and do no harm to others; why then trouble one's self about them? The religious practices of men are as various as their minds; let every one follow his own inclinations, and not interfere with others."

"When Jesus and his sufferings become the theme, the missionary is generally left to pursue his observations undisturbed, as they have seldom any thing to urge against the Gospel plan of salvation. This is because they cannot see themselves sinners; or at least such sinners as stand in need of eternal redemption; and thus, when the undertaking of a Saviour is alluded to, they say 'It matters not where these men begin, they are sure to end in Jesus and his salvation.' Sometimes they affect to recognize a resemblance between Christ's merits and the virtues of the goddess Kwan-yin, who by her fasting and austerities rescued her family for several generations from the pains of hell. At other times they observe, that their ancient sages did but tell them to be good, and there left them; but the Deliverer of the West gave an honour for their obedience in the world, by which means pardon may be extended to the guilty, and the evil be made good. Most of them, however, pass over the subject in silence; or in the midst of a solemn discourse interrupt the speaker with some irrelevant question about his age, travels, or family; evidently showing that they have no heart to the doctrine propounded. It has no charm, no interest with them; and they say, with Esau, 'What good shall this birthright do to me?'

"The tracts on the feasts of the Chinese, bearing so directly on their superstitions, had awakened all the wrath of the advocates of idolatry; and one of them sat down to write a tract against the missionary. In this he argued, that it was monstrous in barbarians to attempt to improve the inhabitants of the Celestial Empire, when they were so miserably deficient themselves. Thus, introducing opium, for their own benefit to the injury of others, they were deficient in benevolence; sending their fleets and armies to robother nations of their possessions, they could make no pretensions to rectitude; allowing men and women to mix in society and walk arm in arm through the streets, they showed that they had not the least sense of propriety; and rejecting the doctrines of the ancient kings, they were far from displaying wisdom: indeed, truth was the only good quality which they could lay the least claim to. Darkness, therefore, in four out of five of the cardinal virtues, how could they expect to renovate others? circulating books for the renovation of the age, they made no scruple of trampling printed paper under foot; by which they showed their disrespect for the inventors of letters. Further, these would-be exorters of the world were themselves deficient in filial piety; forgetting their parents as soon as dead, putting them off with coffins only an inch thick, and never so much as once sacrificing to their manes, or burning the smallest trifle of gilt paper for their support in the future world. And lastly, they allow the rich and noble to enter office without passing through the literary examinations, and did not throw open the road to advancement to the poorest and meanest in the land; by all which it appeared, that foreigners were inferior to the Chinese, and therefore the most unfit to instruct them."

These occurrences took place amongst the colonists. Here is an incident or two during the running voyage along the coast of China—

"Their anxiety to obtain books, however, must not in the least be ascribed to any knowledge of or relish for their contents; but merely to an eager curiosity to get possession of something that came from abroad, and an insatiable cupidity to obtain what was to be had for nothing. After having supplied them liberally, we stood up in the midst of the thronging floor, and, with a loud voice, proclaimed the news of salvation to the listening throng. We told them of God's pity to mankind in sending his own Son tos are our sinful race, and detailed to them the relation of the birth, life, death, and resurrection of our blessed Saviour; in obedience to whose command we were come to testify the glad tidings of great joy in their ears. One man, who had listened attentively, exclaimed, 'Oh, you are come to propagate religion!' 'Just so,' we replied; 'and happy will you be if you receive it.'

"Finding us, determined, he left us, when another began. 'You speak of this Je-us as a Saviour; pray whom does he save?' 'All who believe,' we replied. He resumed: 'You talk of the torgiveness of sins; shall I obtain the forgiveness of sins by reading this book?' 'If you follow its directions, and believe in the holy Saviour, you will.' 'What will this Saviour bestow on those who trust in him?' 'He will take them to heaven.' Have you believed?' 'I hope I have.' 'Has he taken you to heaven?' 'I trust he will when I die.' 'Die! oh, you have to wait till death for all this: give me present enjoyment: who cares what will happen after death, when consciousness ceases?' So saying, he turned away."

We had marked several other passages both of a religious and a secular kind; but we must stop here, with a general recommendation of China, its State and Prospects, so that if our view is wrong the reader may set himself right. Its author is not only an able and observing man, but a Christian of enlarged and tolerant mind, who even renders full justice to the Roman Catholic missions,—a worthy servant of the London Missionary Society, whose fundamental principle is "not to send any form of church government, about which there may be a difference of opinion amongst serious Christians, but the gospel, to the heathen."

Mr. Slick's Opinion of the British.

What success had you, said I, in the sale of your Clocks among the Scotch in the eastern part of the Province? do you find them as gullible as the blue-noses? Well, said he, you have heerd tell that a Yankee never answers one question, without axing another, havent you? Did you ever see an English Stage Driver make a bow? because if you hante observed it, I have, and a queer one it is, I swan. He brings his right arm up jist across his face, and passes on, with a knowin nod of his head, as much as to say, how do you do? but keep clear o' my wheels, or I'll fetch your hörses a lick in the mouth as sure as you're born; jist as a bear puts up his paw to fend off the blow of a stick from his nose. Well, that's the way I pass them are bare breeched Scotchmen. Lord, if they were located down in these here Cumberland mashes, how the musquitoes would tickle them up, wouldn't they? They'd set 'em scratchin thereabouts, as an Irishman does his head, when he's in search of a lie. Them are fellers cut their eye teeth afore they ever sot foot in this country, I expect. When they get a bawbee, they know what to do with it, that's a fact; they open their pouch and drop it in, and its got a spring like a fox-trap—it holds fast to all it gets, like grim death to a dead nigger. They are proper skin flints, you may depend. Oatmeal is no great shakes at best; it tante even as good for a horse as real yaller Varginy corn, but I guess I warnt long in finding out that the grits hardly pay for the riddlin. No, a Yankee has as little chance among them as a Jew has in New England; the sooner he clears out the better. You can no more put a leake into them, than you can send a chisel into Teakewood—it turns the edge of the tool the first drive. If the blue-noses knew the value of money as well as they do, they'd have more cash, and fewer Clocks and tin reflectors, I reckon.

Now, its different with the Irish; they never carry a puss, for they never have a cent to put in it. They are always in love or in liquor, or else in a row; they are the merriest shavers I ever seed. Judge Beeler, I dare say you have heerd tell of him—he's a funny feller—he put a notice over his factory gate at Lowell, 'no cigars or Irishmen admitted within these walls:' for, said he, the one will set a flame agoin among my cottons, and t'other among my galls. I wont have no such inflammable and dangerous things about me on account. When the British wanted our folks to join in the treaty to chock the wheels of the slave trade, I recollect hearin old John Adams say, we had ought to humour them; for, says he, they supply us with labor on easier terms, by shippin out the Irish. Says he, they work better, and they work cheaper, and they dont live so long. The blacks, when they are past work, hang on for ever, and a proper bill of expence they be; but hot weather and new rum rub out the poor rates for tother ones.

The English are the boys for trading with; they shell out their cash like a sheaf of wheat in frosty weather—it flies all over the thrashin floor; but then they are a cross grained, ungainly, kickin breed of cattle, as I ever a must ever seed. Whoever gave them the name of John Bull, knew what he was about, I tell you; for they are bull-headed folks, I vow; sulky, ugly tempered, vicious critters, a pawin and a roaring the whole time, and plaguy onsafe unless well watched. They are as headstrong as mules, and as conceited as peacocks.

The astonishment with which I heard this tirade against my countrymen, absorbed every feeling of resentment. I listened with amazement at the perfect composure with which he uttered it. He treated it as one of those self-evident truths, that need neither proof nor apology, but as a thing well known and admitted by all mankind.

There's no richer sight that I know of, said he, than to see one on 'em when he first lands in one of our great cities. He swells out as big as a balloon, his skin is ready to burst with wind—a regular walking bag of gas; and he prances over the pavement like a bear over hot iron—a great awkward hulk of a feller, for they aint to be compared to the French in manners) a snirkin at you, as much as to say, 'look here, Jonathan, ture's an Englishman; here's a boy that's got blood as pure as a Norman pirate, and lots of the blunt of both kinds, a pocket full of one, and a mouthful of tother: beant he lovely?' and then he looks as fierce as a tiger, as much as to say, 'say boo to a goose, if you dare.'

No, I believe we may stump the Univarse; we improve on every thing, and we have improved on our own species. You'll search one while, I tell you, afore you'll find a man that, take him by and large, is equal to one of our free and enlightened citizens. He's the chap that has both speed, wind, and bottom; he's clear grit—ginger to the back bone, you may depend. Its generally allowed there aint the beat of them to be found any where. Spry as as a fox, supple as an eel, and cute as a weasel. Though I say it, that shouldn't say it, they fairly take the shine off creation—they are actilly equal to cash. Sayings and Doings of Mr. Slick the Clockmaker.

Francc.

A French writer has given the following comparative estimate of the Navies of France and England. France has 51 sail of the line—63 frigates, 108 corvettes, schooners, brigs, &c.; and 94 cutters, gun-boats, and other one-masted vessels, together with 31 steam-boats; from which it appears that the Royal Navy of France possesses 347 vessels of all descriptions. The Navy of Great Britain, on the other hand, is composed of 328 vessels; viz., 123 sail of the line, 122 frigates, 103 sloops, brigs, &c. 94 cutters, gun-boats, bomb-vessels, &c. and 26 steam-boats. The number of Captains of ships of the line in France is 80, but in England, where they are denominated Post-Captains, it is 750; the remaining Captains are in France 150, and in England 823 In France the Lieutenants of the first class amount to 150, but in England to 2994. The same writer add that the Minister of the French Marine has directed a considerable addition to be made to the officers of the fleet. His plan is to keep 136 vessels of war of all descriptions in active service in times of peace, besides, reserve of 9 ships of the line and 9 frigates, and a proportionable number of vessels of the inferior class. In time of war he proposes to strengthen this peace-establishment with 36 sail of the line and 36 frigates, or more if it should be found expedient. United Service Journal.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,—Disagreable as it is to be engaged in News paper controversy, the letter signed "Spectator," which appeared in your last, leaves me no alternative but to refute publicly, what I have been publicly accused of:—falsehood and slander.

These trivial charges, "Spectator" heaps upon my devoted head in my character of reporter of the "Fourta meeting of the Canton Regatta Club." With admirable dignity and temper he contents himself with stabbing my reputation in the dark, while, with true generosity and greatness of soul, he abstains from hurting my feelings by advancing a single iota of evidence to justify his attack. Perhaps I am wrong in noticing him; for when such insignificant personages as England's Chroniclers are not exempt from the like accusations how can I, the august agent, by whom the records of this noble association are to be handed down to admiring posterity, hope to escape? Deeply impressed with the vast importance, political and commercial, of the body, or rather Aquatic Republic, I have been accused of slandering, I beg, with the greatest respect to assert my innocence. The horrible vision of headless Strafford is now before me, and, while I loosen my neckerchief, I eschew treason: nevertheless I conceive myself at liberty to bestow censure where due, and will lay my head on the block, in the cause of liberty!! (a cough) Spectator! make the most of it.

Now for my defence:—although the indictment is for libel—and libel on a government is treason—no evidence has been produced, no witnesses called, the prosecutor not even sworn. If therefore I merely plead "not guilty" the jury must acquit me. But, Mr. Editor, I am not immaculate. I may possibly (not pretending exactly to be an argus) have overlooked the herculean efforts of some aspiring youth, or left unchronicled the pegasian speed of some loved wherry: if the rub is there, I have sinned unwittingly. If Spectator be in the "executive" and think his self esteem outraged by the remarks at the head of my report, I can but regret his lack of "garret furniture"—vulgo—brains. The said remarks were the offspring (as he supposes) of disappointment,—at the comparative inferiority of the meeting—and of morbid feelings at the diminished interest in the affairs of the Club, which the small attendance of visiters too surely indicated. I am proud to express my hope that I may include the whole of the cabinet in the list of my friends, and I can sincerely assure them, that, had I imagined, my remarks would have ruffled even the most fiery temper, they never should have been published.

I have compared my report with the Umpire's, and can discover no discrepancy, unless it be in the account of the Gig race in which he states the Comet to beat the Gipsy by 4 seconds, while I make the Fanny win by half a boat's length. This mistake—as to winning distance, originated in the information of a friend:—as to name, in my own ignorance of the fact, that the Fanny's name had been changed for the occasion, and that she was, on that occasion, bonafide, the property of the gentleman who entered her.

I have thus, I think, cleared myself of the charges of falsehood and slander, which consequently recoil on the author; and have sufficently explained the discrepancy in my report, to convince your readers, that the charges, "originating, no doubt, in the morbid and perhaps disappointed feelings of your Correspondent, signed "Spectator," are unfounded, and uncalled for, "malevolencia est voluptas ex malo alterius sine emolument suo."

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 24th Nov.

We have during the week had arrivals from many parts. The accounts from the United States offer nothing new in Politics, Canada remained quiet, commerce was reviving. We have per Orwell received the Singapore Free Press of 11th October. Below will found the news received from Lima per John Gilpin.

We have on two occasions recently drawn the attention of our readers to a new rig and model of a vessel invented by Mr. Dempster, and stated also that it was the inventor's wish to raise sufficient funds on shares for the building of such vessel. The cost of a vessel about 60 feet long, built at Macao would, it is supposed, be about 5000 $, and it was proposed to divide this sum into 100 shares of 50 $ each. We have since seen the professional opinion of several gentlemen who inspected the model at Messrs Hooker and Lone's at the inventor's request, and these are to the effect that the new rig might with advantage be employed in vessels of not more than 200 tons, but that the model of the hull is objectionable on account of its great draught of water. Mr. Dempster is however still confident that the other advantages, offered by his model, of strength, fast sailing, and safety counterbalance this defect, and agrees with the recommendation made by one of the inspecting gentlemen that a vessel of about 35 feet in length be built, either here or at Macao, the expense of which would probably amount to only five or six hundred dollars. The inventor is in hopes that the public will assist him with pecuniary means for this comparatively small expenditure, and intends circulating a subscription sheet accordingly.

From a regulation we see in the Boletim Official, Macao 21st November, it appears that the Macao Government intends to levy from January next an import duty of three patacas on every stranger entering within its precincts. This new Police Regulation is to the following effect: That every stranger naturalized or not naturalized in Macao must, within the first fifteen days of next January, leave at the Government Secretariat a declaration of his name, description of his person, his nation, age, whether married or single, occupation, time and object of his visit, and place of residence. All strangers must also produce their passports or such other credentials as they may possess, failing which they must procure a fit person as surety. From this regulation only are excepted such as hold offices under their respective Governments, authorized by that of Portugal; such as are naturalized according to the law; and such as have resided five years in that town. To all strangers, residing in Macao, and capacitated thereto in the above appointed manner, Resident-licences are to be given on printed paper for which THEY ARE TO PAY 3 $.

If, however, a stranger living in Macao (such as newly arrive must apply to the Government Secretariat within the first 24 hours of their arrival) after the 15th January next should neglect to conform to the above regulation, he will be fined fifty dollars, and if, after that, he does not observe them within the next three days the fine will be doubled. Should he continue in disobedience, or should there be reason for suspicion, he will be imprisoned until his departure.

We do not know, to a certainty, whether by some treaties existing between the Indian Government and that of Goa, the latter did not pledge itself to give free access to Macao to all British subjects, but think such is the case. If so it will be the Superintendent's duty to oppose this new imposition, and, certainly, to extend his protection to such of the British subjects as may, by non-compliance to the above regulation, be threatened by the authorities with the fines and punishment therein set forth. We cannot imagine what can possibly have induced the Macao Government to frame such regulation, unless it be the paltry emolument for the passports—a police surveillance over foreigners at Macao can be of no use whatever—as to the threatened punishment of confinement in case of non-compliance, that may, we think, be avoided.

The following has been kindly communicated to us by Mr. Snow, Consul for the United States,

"Consulate of the United States
Singapore, 21st October, 1838.

Sir,

"I beg to state to you, for the information of the Commanders of any of the public ships of the United States, that may be in China, that I have this day received a communication from the Commercial Agent of the United States, dated at Prince of Wales Island or Pinang, on the 9th of this month, informing me that the ship (American) Eclipse had been robbed on the 10th September last, on the West coast of Sumatra of seven chests of Opium and Fourteen thousand Dollars in Specie, and that Capt. Wilkins, the Commander of said ship, and his second officer had been murdered at the same time.

I have the honor to be
Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
J. BALLESTIER.

To the Consul of the United States,
Canton.

In our commercial report last week we alluded to an Imperial Edict issued against the smokers of and dealers in Opium. The following is its translation. It caused at first a good deal of consternation among the Chinese, but we now hear that some of the well informed among them think to have good reason to suspect it of being a forgery.

(Translation.)

"Imperial Edict.—In reference to a memorial laid before us by Hwang Tsiotsze, the vice-president of the Sacrificial Court, it has now been represented to us, by the Sub-Censor Tau Szelin, that the Governors and Lieut. Governors of the provinces having been more strict in the seizure of opium, a brighter spirit has recently been exhibited throughout the provinces. It thus appears that the representations before made by Hwang Tsiotsze were all right: but that all the officers have with one consent mismanaged the matter. When perchance they have made seizures, these have been so few and far-between, that it cannot be that they have all acted with uprightness and public spirit. Hwang Tsiotsze and those with him have, however, apprehended and punished with true purpose of heart, and he has represented his views with plainness and perspicacity. He may well be called a servant useful and devoted to us. Let therefore, the Board of Office consider of his merits liberally, in order that we may, by rewarding him, encourage like conduct.

"Henceforth, let the Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of the Provinces, with severity and earnestness make known their commands to the people. And let them at the same time send out officers, with military retimes, to make search, imperatively requiring that the depraved merchants who deal in opium, and those people who open houses for smoking it, s all without fail be apprehended and brought to trial; and these, after a period of three months shall have elapsed, shall, according to a new law be condemned to death, and so punished. The consumers of opium throughout the provinces must be imperatively required, within the space of three months, to throw off the habit of using it. If any should continue its use after the lapse of this period, such persons must be regarded as unruly people, fearless of the laws, and shall also be condemned, in accordance with the new law, to the penalty of death.

"The Governors and Lieutenant Governors of the Provinces must utterly root out the evil, and must allow no guilty persons to escape through the meshes of the net. If any officers dare to connive at, pass over, or fail to discover, acts of disobedience, besides receiving in their own persons the penalties prescribed by the new law, their sons and grand, sons, also shall be excluded from the public examinations. Such local officers as may with all their hearts fulfil their duty shall, in accordance with the new law, be, upon fitting representation, rewarded conformably to their merits. Let these commands be generally made known to the Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of all the Provinces.—Respect this."

Whether or not, however, the above be a forgery, thus much is certain, that in the northern provinces great numbers of both dealers and smugglers have lately been imprisoned, and that the attention of Government has again been roused against the drug. Also in Canton, on suspicion of its finding its way into the foreign factories, some steps have been taken to show that the authorities are on the qui vive. The Compradores, for instance, of the different houses were all called before the Hon-merchants, and required to give security that neither they nor any of the servants and Coolies employed under them, had dealings in Opium. Mean while, we understand that, though the foreign boats in the river, both here and at Whampoa, are not molested, the business carried on by them is to a very limited extent.

On Monday night last the Mandarins made a seizure of two boxes of Silk Piece Goods, when about to be smuggled, it is said, into a ship's boat. The shopkeeper, supposed to have sold the goods, as well as the Compradores of the Hong whence it is supposed the goods were sent, have for the present "gone into the country," that is, they keep out of the way, until the noise of the affair shall have blown over.

The Co-hon has at length given notice that they are to begin paying Hing-tae's debts The first instalment, we are informed, will be paid on Monday, the 26th inst., when 4 per Cent will be distributed, or about 8 100,000 altogether. The amount for contribution should have been larger, but the collections of the Hong-Yune tax have, of course, been much less than was anticipated, from the Tea and Raw-silk shipping season being so late.

On Wednesday last the Society for the diffusion of useful knowledge held it's annual meeting at the Rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, and we shall give a report of it next week, when we shall be able to lay before our readers a full account of what passed at the meeting and of the Society's labours during the past year.

The Members of the General Chamber of Commerce met on Thursday last to take into consideration the "ways and means," and it was unanimously resolved that the recommendation of the Committee to raise the subscription of members for the present year to 860 for each firm, and 825 for each individual, be agreed to.

The following account of affairs in Peru has been obligingly given to us by a passenger per the John Gilpin. It will be seen that, for the present, the Chilenos have taken Lima, but we doubt not that Santa Cruz will soon be upon them, and that, after the capture of the Chilian army, he will take care that they be not able, a second time, to reward his magnanimity, with treachery.

"The second expedition from Chile consisting of rather more than 5000 men and several vessels of war arrived off the Port of Callao on the 7th August last and there found that Genl. Orbegoso, who had been left at the head of the Peruvian Government by Santa Cruz who was then in Bolivia, had declared the independance of Peru, and to do away with the confederation between that country and Bolivia. Genl. Bulues, who has command of the Chile army, used every effort to be allowed to land his troops, at Callao and join with Orbegoso against Santa Cruz, but without success; he then went to Ancon, a small port a few leagues from Callao, and landed without any opposition.

"From that time until the 21st August nothing of any consequence took place, excepting endeavoring to negotiate, but Genl Bulues made such high demands that it was found impossible to come to any terms of peace. Accordingly, on the 21st August the Chile army marched upon Lima, and, after a good deal of resistance by Orbegoso with little more than 2000 men, the City was taken. The loss on both sides was estimated at 1000 men. Gamarra, who accompanied the Chile expedition, was elected President, however he is so very unpopular in Lima that he has met with nothing but insult since his arrival.

"Genl. Orbegoso fled to the Castle of Callao, which he held at the time the "John Gilpin," sailed from thence, and was in a situation to hold out against almost any number of men for three or four months.

"The Chilenos still continued in possession of Lima; however, certain intelligence had been received that Santa Cruz was within three days march of them with an army of 12,000 Boliuian troops, and it was supposed the moment he made his appearance, the whole City would rise in arms to join him.

"He is very popular and, without a doubt, the only man who can give peace to the country. Of course, business was quite at a stand-still, and with no prospect of any improvement so long as the Chilenos remained in the country."

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS

Cotton Manufactures.—Little or nothing has been doing in Long-cloths during the week, but as the heavy stock has, in some degree, been reduced, holders are generally firmer. Cotton Yarn without any improvement of in price. A sale is reported of 50 bales Nos. 26 @ 40, averaging about 28, as low as $ 31½, but the quality must have been indifferent. A re-sale also of a considerable parcel purchased some time since at $ 32½ was effected, a day or two since, at the same price, but excluding some inferior lots.

Woollens.—Two parcels equal to about 1000 Ps. of Spanish Stripes have been disposed of—part of good quality at 3. 40 and the other at 1. 90, we understand. The market is steady. Longells remain much the same. a small lot changed hands, we hear, at 8½.

Metals.—Lead is dull of sale. Iron, from the small stock, in good demand.

Rice.—Our present quotation could hardly be obtained, except for really good quality.

Straits Produce.—Pepper, without alteration. Betelnut, will command our quotations. Of Tin the stock is very short, and a sale of about 500 Piculs Banca is reported at Macao at even better than 23 $.

Rattans.—are also in fair demand.

Cotton.—There has been an almost entire stagnation in the Cotton market for the last ten days. Nothing is doing in Bengal and the dealers are said to have nearly the whole of their purchases on hand, except what the Chinchew Junks took. The price of Bombay continues the same, but with little enquiry, and the only sale we hear of, is of about 700 bales of fair to good quality at 8.8 @ 9.T. For Madras there is no demand whatever, and we doubt whether sales to any extent could be effected, even at a reduction of 2 @ 3 mace on our quotations, and holders generally therefore appear inclined to wait for a reaction, which they look for from the short supply of Bengal and Madras as compared with former years.

Opium.—Our quotations are nominal; little or not being having been done since the appearance of the Ediet noticed in our last. It is now pretty generally believed that, if not an entire forgery, it is a very garbled report of some new measure of the Pekin Government, of which no authentic account has reached the authorities here. There appears however no doubt but that serious interruption has been experienced in the northern provinces, and one or two of the Junks are said to be returning without having been enabled to land their Opium. The Whampoa trade in also not so brisk. To the Westward, however, there is a little more stir. The Lintin deliveries to 15th were: Patna old 37, new 20; Benares old 9½, new 9; Malwa 385; Total 460½ Chests.

EXPORTS.

Raw Silk.—Nothing has been done in Silk yet, and although the price has rather declined in Nankin, the holders here show no disposition to reduce their demands.

Tea.—We hear as yet of no transactions.

The Company's Agents have this day raised their exchange on Bengal, to 212 C. R. per 100 Sp. Drs.

Port Essington.

NEW SETTLEMENT IN NORTH AUSTRALIA.—We have republished from the Canton Press of 22nd Sept. last, a letter addressed by Admiral MAITLAND to the Chief Superintendent in China relative to the establishment of a Port on the Northern Coast of Australia, the object of which is to announce its existence to the Indian public, with the view of inducing some vessel to proceed thither and open a communication with the new Settlement. The locality fixed upon is Port Essington, situated on the Cobourg Peninsula in Latitude about 11. 10 S. and Longitude 132 10 E. It lies a little East of South from the Island of Timor Laut, from which it is distant about 3 degrees, or a good day's sail; it is about twice as far from the Aru group, which lie in a north westerly direction; and is somewhat more than six degrees distant from Cape Walsh, the nearest land to it on the coast of New Guinea. The situation appears to have been chosen as well from its being calculated to afford relief to the shipping engaged in the trade from India and China to N. S. Wales, and which have to pass through Torres Straits, as from its being considered adapted to form an extensive commercial emporium. Whatever service it may be deemed capable of affording in the former respect, we confess we entertain very considerable doubts as to its attaining any great importance as a place of trade. We are aware that Mr. EARL, in the Appendix to his work on the "Eastern Seas," supports a different view of the question, and enlarges upon the advantages likely to accrue to Great Britain from the establishment of a mart in that part of the world; indicating too, as the most suitable spot, the very locality which has been chosen. But that gentleman has, it appears to us, assumed rather too much in some respects, and proceeded upon imperfect information in others. He sees distinctly enough, however, the only means by which a settlement in North Australia can become of any commercial importance, so far as depends upon its relations with the Archipelago; and an incidental examination of some of his views and opinions on the subject, is perhaps the best way of intimating our own regarding the future eminence of Port Essington as a trading emporium.

Mr. EARL adduces in support of his views the fact, that "the Eastern part of the Indian Archipelago, and the Northern Coast of Australia produce many articles in abundance which are adapted only to the China market, such as tripang, edible birds' nests, sandalwood, &c." This is certainly true—and Mr. EARL, aware that there is no chance of the Chinese junks themselves coming to the new settlement, is obliged to discover a route by which the articles in question, (granting them likely to be collected there in large quantities) may ultimately find their way to China. The merchants of Sydney, according to his view, will send up manufactured goods, (received from England in exchange for their wool and oil, and adapted for the tastes of the natives of the Archipelago) to the new emporium, to be exchanged for the produce collected there; this will be carried back to Sydney, and reshipped thence to China, and there invested in Tea and other articles adapted to the markets in New South Wales. "The traffic," he says, "would be considerable, and therefore (!) the more lucrative." It might, we think, have suggested itself to Mr. EARL, who is well acquainted with the general features of the trade of this port, that these articles, after paying a profit to the native, to the trader importing them at the Australian settlement, and to the speculator who has bought them from him on coming to exchange them again for the manufactures from Sydney—and freight for a double voyage on board of a Europe vessel—that is, first to Sydney, and then to China, with all the other shipping charges incidental to such a "complicated traffic," must inevitably be undersold in the China markets by the self-same articles sent there from Singapore, to which they are brought in large quantities on native bottoms and exported by the Chinese junks.

When Mr. EARL further states that "the natives prefer receiving European manufactures in exchange," for the articles mentioned, he overrates a good deal the exclusive taste shewn by the natives for our manufactures. It is no doubt true that they buy them in large quantities, but they are equally partial to the manufactures of continental India, the Opium of Bengal, and a variety of other articles, the produce and manufactures of the surrounding countries, with which the merchants of Sydney could never have it in their power to supply the Australian emporium to resell there at paying prices. All these articles however the native traders in the most distant quarters of the Archipelago know they can procure here, where they also find a mart for articles of their own manufacture, which the merchants of Sydney would not know what to do with—their Kain Kapis or Sarongs for example, which are in such extensive request among the Malays, and the more wealthy Chinese colonists. Let Mr. EARL look at the export list of a native trading vessel from this, containing goods the produce and manufacture of Europe, India, Siam, China, Java &c. and he must acknowledge, we think, that a port which would afford the more limited variety of European manufactures only, is not likely to prove an attraction to any large mass of the traders of the Archipelago.

Mr. EARL, also, rather triumphantly refers to the lucrative trade carried on by the Americans in the Eastern part of the Archipelago, by exchanging their manufactures for those articles of produce which he specifies as peculiar to that region—Trepang, Birds nests, Sandal wood, Mother O Pearl shell, and Tortoiseshell—and carrying the latter to the China market, as a proof that a Settlement in the vicinity of that quarter of the Archipelago referred to, would be the means of allurring to it a valuable trafic. We believe that the trade in question carried on by the Americans was found to be a losing one, which was doubtless the cause of its having of late years been altogether abandoned by them—and on reference to a statement of the American trade to Canton for the year 1836-37, it will be found that it does not enumerate a single importation of the articles specified by Mr. EARL, excepting only a small quantity of M. O'P. Shells, not amounting in value to 2,000 Dollars. As Mr. EARL, however, looks upon the American operations in the Archipelago with a somewhat jealous eye, it may be a source of congratulation to him to find that they have thus far ceased to resort to it; however little that fact may make in support of his argument in favour of the "great importance" which a settlement in the North Coast of Australia would be to Great Britain.

We would not be supposed to maintain that there is no probability of any traffic being carried on at the New Australian Settlement in the articles particularly specified by Mr. EARL—but what would even an extensive traffic in these articles amount to? It is well known that the Birds Nests procured is that part of the Archipelago are of the most inferior description. Of Beche de mer there are varieties, but the total value of all that was imported at Singapore last year amounted to no more than Drs. 44 163. Of Mother O Pearl shells the total value imported here during the same period was only Drs. 15,026. Of Sandal wood no more than Drs. 1560, although the previous year it came to Drs. 21,563 It is not likely that the traffic in these articles at Port Essington will at any time be more extensive than it now is at Singapore, and it must be some time before it reaches that point, while at the same time they are the principal, if not the sole, articles in which it is expected there will be any trade at all To us, therefore, there seems no probability of an outlet for British manufactures, through Port Essington, of such magnitude as to make it worth while to put the country to the expense of forming and maintaining a Settlement there; and if duties are to be put on, by way of making the place contribute to pay its own expenses, there will assuredly be no traffic at all. If the British government, instead of forming new Settlements to circulate our manufactures throughout the Eastern Archipelago, took means to enforce adherence on the part of the Dutch to the spirit and intention of the Treaty of 1834, they would be acting in a manner infinitely more conducive to the important end in view. *Sing. FROM THE FRONTIER.

Extract of a letter dated,

"NIAGARA FALLS, June 21, 1838

Dear Sir:—From information which I received this morning at Niagara, 7 miles below this, and also at this place, there has no doubt been an engagement of a trifling character between a small party of the Queen's Lancers and a large body of Patriots. The Patriots are estimated at from 400 to 1500. They are situated in a swamp, near the Welland canal, and about 24 miles west from this place. The engagement to take place last evening. Most of the Patriot leaders have left this part of the country."

The Buffalo Daily Star of Friday has the following rumor:—

There is a rumor of a fresh insurrection at "Short Hills," Canada, about thirty miles from this city. We doubt the extent of killed and prisoners which have been reported. We shall probably know before our next paper comes out. New York Morning Herald, June 26.

FROM THE FRONTIER.—The following is a copy of a "proclamation" recently issued by the leader of the gang that destroyed the steamboat Sir Robert Peel. It was obtained for Gov. Marcy; and if the facts may be relied on, is important, as showing that the attack, although made in the American waters, was concerted in and proceeded from the British dominions:

"To all whom it may concern:

"I, William Johnson, a natural born citizen of Upper Canada, certify that I hold a commission in the Patriot service of Upper Canada as commander in chief of the naval forces and flotilla. I commended the expedition that captured and destroyed the steamer Sir Robert Peel. The men under my command in that expedition, were nearly all natural born English subjects—the exceptions were volunteers for the expedition. My Head Quarters was on an Island in the St. Lawrence, without the jurisdiction of the United States, at a place named by me Fort Wallace. I am not acquainted with the boundary line, and know which of the Islands do, and which do not, belong to the United States; and in the selection of the island I wished to be positive, and not locate within the jurisdiction of the United States, and had reference to the decision of the Commissioners under the 6th article of the treaty of Ghent, done at Utica, in the state of New York, 13th June, 18 2. I know the number of the Island, and by that decision it was British territory I yet hold possession of that station, and we also occupy a station some twenty or more miles from the boundary line of the United States, in what was his Majesty's dominions until it was occupied by us. I act under orders. The object of my movements is the independence of the Canadas. I am not at war with the commerce or property of the citizens of the United States,

"Signed this tenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty eight.

"WILLIAM JOHNSON."

This scoundrel and his party have seized and burned three farm houses at the Canadian isle of Taute, opposite Bath, and shot some of the inhabitants.—They have a large barge with three six pounders in it, and bid defiance to the British steamers to take them.

Its high time these Lake Brigands were "cut out." A few more aggressions from either side will light the torch of war sooner or later, when thousands of valuable lives will be sacrificed in consequence of the lawless rapacity of a few worthless vagabonds. Ibid.

Hong-Debts.

We have just seen in circulation for signature by the subjects of H B. M. who are creditors of the insolvent Hongs Hingtae and Kingqua, a memorial addressed to Viscount Palmerston, H. M. Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, acquainting his Lordship with the course which the majority of those interested in the question here have considered it expedient to adopt towards settling their claims with the Cohong. We give the memorial with the signatures as it has been sent to Capt Elliot at Macao, for transmission to the British Foreign Office.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE,
LORD VISCOUNT PALMERSTON.

My Lord,

When we had the honor to address your Lordship on the 21st of March last, respecting our claims upon the Chinese Hong merchants, we took occasion to inform the Viceroy of Canton that we had done so; but we added that in attending your Lordship's acknowledgment of our memorial, as should gratefully receive any portion of our claims which the viceroy might be pleased to order to be paid, and listen to any propositions upon the subject which the Hong merchants might offer. The viceroy, in reply, rebuked what he called our perversity; but the Hong merchants continued to negotiate a settlement of our claims, and we have finally agreed to receive payment of them in the following manner; viz:

Hingtae's by instalments in 8½ years, beginning from the 30th November 1837, and Kingqua's by instalments in 10 years, beginning from the 1st July of the present year, together with simple interest at the rate of six per Cent per annum upon the latter's debts, to be paid after the liquidation of the principal.

Your Lordship, will observe that we have gained little better terms for the liquidation of Hingtae's debts than at the date of our last memorial, but we have also arranged for Kingqua's; and looking to the magnitude of the debts and to the precedents in favor of their liquidation by instalment, we have thought it prudent not to press the matter further. We cannot, however, forbear to call again to your Lordship's attention, that the main difficulty in obtaining a more favorable settlement has been, according to the Hong merchants themselves, the demands upon them by the Hoppo who has lately retired from office, and by the present functionary who succeeded him, on account of alledged Imperial dues and requisitions. Contingencies of this kind, which interfere with the adjustment of our claims, may obviously become, in conjunction with other causes, the means of protracting the payment of the instalments, if not of failure altogether in their ultimate liquidation. We do not presume, in opposition to the usage of our own and other countries, to expect payment of our debts before the just dues of Government; but your Lordship has already been made aware that the Imperial Government is pledged to us, both by law and prescription, for the Hong merchants's debts, and our claims are therefore, identified with its own.

The demand upon the Cohong besides, does not arise entirely out of dues already incurred to the government, but out of temporary exaction which we have reason to believe to be, sometimes, a mere cover for extortion.

We beg further to urge upon your Lordship's attention, that Kin-qua's Hong has not been officially declared insolvent, although we have the viceroy's sanction to the proposed liquidation of its debts, to effect which the Cohong has agreed to pay $195 000 annually. We believe the arrangement to be made in perfect good faith, but the informality attending it may, no doubt, be adduced hereafter to invalidate the settlement, should the Hong become ultimately bankrupt. We do not hesitate, nevertheless, to accede to the proposed terms, seeing that our own wish to carry on the Hong is echoed by the Cohong, and sanctioned by the viceroy. We could expect nothing from its formal bankruptcy, but another tedious discussion, and the substitution for it of another Hong of, perhaps, less character and no better credit.

We expressed a doubt, in our former memorial to your Lordship, of the capability of the Hong merchants to conduct their affairs beneficially in the present state of the trade between China and Great Britain; which, in addition to the above causes, occasion distrust of the regular payment of the dividends on our claims, as now proposed. In foregoing our pretensions, therefore, to more favorable terms, we repose always on the hope of aid from His Majesty's Government to procure fulfilment of the stipulations of our agreement, should our fears of its infraction be unfortunately realized.

The chief object of our first memorial to your Lordship is thus temporarily disposed of; but the other impediments to our trade therein complained of, still remain. No new Hongs have been established and we have still, therefore, to anticipate future debts and their attendant unprofitable liquidation perhaps, after such another twenty months exasperating discussion with the local authorities and with the Co-hong, as that from which we have just escaped. An overture again, therefore, to urge upon your Lordship's consideration, that part of our former memorial, which suggests the interference of H M Government, whenever a fit opportunity may offer, to provide for the earlier liquidation of debts which the Hongs may hereafter incur: not less to save H. M. subjects, who may unfortunately be implicated in the debts, the direct loss attending their protracted payment; than to obviate the necessity of their recurrence by inducing the Imperial Government to remedy the inefficiency of the Co-hong, and to restrain the exactions imposed upon it, by the local authorities of Canton.

The attention of H. M. Government may be engaged more readily to this subject by the fact; that it is proposed to pay Hing-tae's and King-qua's debts, and the government claims, chiefly out of Additional duties upon the foreign trade lately imposed for this purpose.

These duties are not only a cause of much immediate vexation to the importers of British manufactures; but an accumulation of them hereafter, occasioned by the recurrence of Hong debts during the progress of liquidation of those of King-qua and Hing-tae, would probably amount to a prohibition of such imports by legal trade.

We have the honor to be,
My Lord,
Your Lordship's most obedient and humble Servants

SOCIETY FOR THE DIFFUSION OF USEFUL KNOWLEDGE IN CHINA.

The Fourth annual meeting of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge in China was held in the rooms of the General Chamber of Commerce, at Canton, on Wednesday, the 21st of November, 1838, at 11 A. M. Present: Messrs. Turner, Matheson, Green, Lay, Revd Mr. Kruckeberg, Mr. Moller, Revd. Dr. Parker, Mr. A. Matheson, Revd, Mr. Bridgman, and Mr. Morrison. Mr. Turner, President, in the Chair.

The Report of the Committee was then read by the Secretary. (Of this the following is a brief analysis.)

"After a reference to last year's report, it was stated that Historical and Geographical treatises had chiefly employed the pens of those engaged in writing for the publications intended by the society. There are however two kinds of publications which are much read, and consequently meet with an extensive demand among the Chinese; these are Almanacks, and collections for useful and elementary education. The almanacks published by the Chinese, with the imperial sanction, are filled with results of the (so called) astrological science, and not dissimilar to many annual publications of that sort in the west. They point out lucky and unlucky days, and pretend to direct in what way every day's business can most beneficially be transacted subject to the influence of the stars. The Committee of the Society have contemplated the publication of an almanack containing really useful and astronomical information, in the hopes thereby to shake gradually the implicit faith the Chinese now entertain in the influence of the stars and the reading of them by their sages. Of books giving elementary and useful information several now in use among the Chinese are known to the Committee, and a cursory review of their contents was given in the report. They are made up of moral and social precepts, arithmetical lessons, directions as to epistolary intercourse, etc, and chiefly addressed to juvenile readers. A judicious collection of matter for similar publications by the Society, will, it is supposed, be very useful. A third species of publications much admired by the Chinese are moral and entertaining tales. Of these the Society has by the gift of the proprietor, now collections of the fables of Æsop, in three small volumes which in a Chinese dress have been well received. This is the only new book actually published by the Society to which reference has not already been made. Of those before mentioned, the "View of Universal History" is about to be published, and an edition of 300 copies has been ordered. The publication of the History of England has been accidentally retarded. The "Description of the United States," and "History of the Jews" have been sent to Press. The treatises on Geography, and on the Being of God, the two latter by the late Dr. Morrison, are not yet fully prepared for the Press. The Chinese Magazine has been continued, and four half-yearly volumes, in addition to the two published by Mr. Gutzlaff in 1833 and 34 will soon be completed. Hitherto difficulties of a mechanical nature have prevented this publication to be embellished by pictorial illustrations—these, it is now hoped, have been overcome, and the next numbers will be provided with them. Two new books, of which one is already in the Press, are besides to be published by the Society—the one already in the Press being a "Chrestomathy of the Canton Dialect" by the Rev. Mr. Bridgman. This publication is chiefly intended to facilitate to Europeans the acquisition of the language as spoken in Canton; the other publication is a description of the Indian Archipelago. Hitherto, difficulties opposing the circulation of the Societys' publications in Canton have been seriously felt, these the Report says, are now partly removed. That few Chinese have, as yet, purchased any of the Society's books may in part be owing to the liberality with which they have been distributed gratis, but it is expected that this distribution will beget a desire strong enough among the Chinese to purchase them in future, it being the Society's desire that their price be as moderate as possible, and the books easily procurable. The many books now in progress of publication have involved the Society in much greater expense during the past year than was contemplated, and the balance now remaining in the hands of the treasurer is only $179. However many new members have joined during the year, and their number at present amounts to 83.

After the reading of the Report, the Chairman made a few observations on the present condition and prospects of the Society as therein shown.

The Revd. E. C. Bridgman then rose, and in few words, spoke respecting the character, object, position, and operations, of the Society, nearly as follows.

"Every one in the East (he observed), or who is conversant with the history of events in India, and in the foreign settlements on this side of it, has seen very great improvements made during the last ten or twenty years. By education—by the diffusion of knowledge—by the introduction of useful arts and inventions, such for example as the steam-engine—affairs have taken a new and happy direction, and received in that direction a powerful impulse. The age of monopolies is now gone—that spirit that upheld them is passing rapidly away. In its stead, a better spirit is abroad in the minds of men—one more liberal, more generous, more active. In this spirit, the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge in China was instituted,—has been, and will continue to be, sustained.

"As to the Character of the Society, it is purely benevolent, having in it nothing that can give offence, or that can be the occasion of offence, to any one. With politics and religion, it does not inter-meddle; for without their spheres it has a range wide enough for all it energies and all its resources.

"Its sole object is to make the people of this country acquainted with those things—historical facts, arts, sciences, and such like—of which they can both appreciate the value and understand the uses, but of which, without friendly and gratuitous aid, such as this Society affords, they must long remain ignorant. You know, sir, and all gentlemen of this Society know, that there are in the possession of western nations a great many things capable of being turned to good account in these regions. But the Chinese, while continuing yet ignorant of these things, cannot advertise for them, and will not seek them. However useful a thing may be here, until its value eb understood, it must some gratuitous gift if it come at all. So it was with the fire-engine, which was first brought to China only a few years ago, and which is now so well understood here that its use is extending from this to other cities of the empire.

"The position of the Society is on the boundary line between the great regions of light and darkness. With one hand its members may gather up the richest fruits of modern invention and discovery throughout the whole western hemisphere, and with the other they may scatter the same far and wide among the inhabitants of these eastern nations. At first, when the Society commenced its course, its works were retarded and stopped, and some pecuniary loss were incurred; but on the score of useful experience much has been gained in consequence. The mode adopted, and the site fixed on, for the mechanical portion of its duties, are different from what they then were, and the whole business is now carried on out of the reach of the native authorities. Our position, therefore, has become, in this respect, safe and secure; and the manufacture of books beyond the boundaries of this empire may be pushed to any extent you please, provided the requisite means are at command.

"The operations of the Society, limited as they have been, afford just ground of encouragement. The Treasurer's report, now lying before you, is some evidence of what has been done during the past year; though it shows a large disbursement, without any returns from sales, it affords no cause of concern as to the future. If good works are prepared for the press, we may be assured that means for their publication will not long be wanting.

"To these remarks, I will only add, that it is a pleasure and an honor to cooperate in labors so useful as those in which you and the Society are engaged. And, for one, I assure you, that whatever of time can be secured for their accomplishment shall be most cordially given."

The Revd. P. Parker, in moving the first resolution, said:—"It seems unnecessary to dwell upon the peculiar obstacles which the Society, as it has been mentioned, has had to encounter. They are well known to every gentlemen of the Society.—This is especially the time to prepare the ground, and scatter the seed. Some fruits have already appeared—many more are in different stages—all are advancing, as fast as the nature of the case will admit, to full maturity—a maturity which we may yet live to see. But a still more abundant harvest will be witnessed, no doubt, at a remoter period, by our successors. The object is great, and the time and means for its attainment must be proportionate. As happily expressed in the report of the Committee, the obstacles are great and numerous, but not insurmountable. I most cordially subscribe to those sentiments, and desire that report may be published."

Hhe then moved, E. Moller, Esq. seconded, and it was unanimously

Resolved, That the interesting report which has just been read, be accepted and published.

G. T. Lay, Esq. then rose and spoke in support of the resolution. The following are some of the remarks made by him.

"Mankind are often taxed with thinking too highly of their own merits, and perhaps with justice, but if there be in us a natural aptitude which leads us to overrate what we have done, there is also a proneness to underrate our capabilities, or what we can do, especially when we meditate the advancement of any object that has some reference to the good of others. Many a golden vein of talent, patience, and courage might be discovered in the minds of men, to which the possessor himself was altogether a stranger. And how few of us husband all our resources, on improve all those opportunities which providence has put within our reach. We lightly esteem our own endowments for action, we slight those advantages which God has given to us, because, forsooth, our talents did not happen to be five or ten instead of two. Now as it fares with individuals, so it often fares with societies at their commencement. At first, the ground must be prepared, obstacles removed, misconceptions rectified, the scheme of operation ascertained and defined, and means not only secured, but even made. This requires time, which is not more a function in astronomy and dynamics, than it is in the prosperity of a public institution. In the mean while nothing seems to have been accomplished, the subscribers begin to marvel at the tardiness of its progress and ask with impatience what has been done, and because a copious return of great achievements cannot be made out at once, they are filled with despondency, which by a sort of contagion communicates itself to the committee, and sometimes takes such a hold, that the hands of the most sanguine among its members begin to hang down.

"In such cases it is proper to look aside from present discouragement, and solace the mind by reflecting upon the excellence of the object, and the purity of purpose with which it was at first undertaken. In the history of this society we see difficulties have been surmounted as an earnest of better things, but much labour must be encountered before we may expect any great and striking result. Let us then call to mind the scope and intentions with which it set out, and some of its principal features, and the position and the rank it ought to hold, not to make us proud, but to stir us up to activity and perseverance. As to the rank of this society we shall soon perceive, that it lays claim to no mean relationship and affinity. If the Bible Societies hold the first place, because they propose to give the word of God to every human being, if missionary societies take he second, because their object is to send men to teach all nations the way of salvation, societies like this may fairly come in to the third, because they labour to diffuse among all classes of a community that knowledge, which is the best of all wordly gifts, as it is the grammar and interpretation of God's works, an analytic and synthetic account of those very lessons which they teach. If we consider these three kinds of associations we shall find, that they have at least one important principle in common. For the Bible Society aims to give the whole Bible to all without any reservation whatsoever; all who are willing to read are by it deemed worthy to do so. The missionary Society commissions her servants to preach the whole truth to every man, not to deal out one sort to the laic clerical and the learned, and another sort to the laic and the unlearned, but as far as possible, to make and the unlearned, but as far as possible, to make all share alike. The useful knowledge Society is all share alike. The useful knowledge Society is the labouring to give not one kind of information to the high and another to the poor, nor to disseminate instruction merely, but to make all classes welcome instruction merely, but to make all classes welcome to he choicest treasures of learning and science without any difference or respecting of persons whatsoever. The recognition of a common principle with societies of such honour and importance bestows a dignity and value upon this society, and we may well rejoice in our affinity, a likeness of features so benign, so liberal, and so like the character of Him, who is "good to all."

"After the two special means just alluded to, the distribution of the scriptures and the preaching of the gospel, there is no second or instrumental cause, no human means can vie in utility with scattering in a kind and bountiful manner the varied stores of useful knowledge, nor tend so successfully to bring about that consummation we all long to see, when every man shall in his place acknowledge the one true God and Jesus Christ, whom he hath sent. As an individual I may not have it in my power to aid this society directly, but on my return to England I shall devote all my leisure to the interests of China, shall endeavour to create sober and enlightened views of her condition, and as opportunity shall serve, strive to awake a feeling and sympathy in favour of the praise worthy and truly excellent undertaking, which use are now met to consider."

On the motion of the Rev. E C. Bridgman seconded by James Matheson, Esq., it was

Resolved,—"That in place of the Fourth Regulation as it now stands, the following amendment be adopted" The resident members shall include native and foreign gentlemen. Any individual wishing to cooperate in the grand aliject of the Society, and conforming to its regulations, may become a member.

On the motion of J. Matheson, Esq., seconded by G. T. Lay, Esq., it was—

Resolved,—That, as the transient nature of European Communities in the East renders it difficult to maintain the efficiency of this Society, without the constant accession of new members, especially of those who have a knowledge of the Chinese language, it is deemed highly desirable that the junior portion of the Community be invited to cooperate with us so that they be earnestly recommended to give their attention to the study of the language, as a pursuit no less conducive to individual interest, than to the noble object of advancing this great empire in the scale of civilization.

Mr. Lay in seconding the resolution made remarks nearly to the following effect:

The usefulness of this society must bear a certain ratio to the number of it's helpers and their qualifications for promoting the specific object, which it contemplates. One of these qualifications is a knowledge of the Chinese language joined with an insight into some department of literature or science. Now, as many young men come hither with the view of staying several years in the country, it seems highly desirable that this Committee should, by some public expression of its sentiments, invite all such as have health and leisure to turn their attention to this subject, and in the issue so qualify themselves for acting a part, that would redound to their own credit, the comfort of their friends, and the welfare of mankind.

Mr. Lay observed, that among those who engage in designs for the common good, we generally find two kinds of persons — some act from impulse and feeling, while others act from principle. The efforts of one sort are desultory and unequal, of the other steady and uniform. With the latter are often times such as have begun in early life to cultivate an interest in public institutions by frequenting their meetings and making themselves acquainted with their object and history. By subscribing to their funds, however small the contribution might be, they learn to feel that they have something at stake, a sort of flien in their prosperity. In virtue of early association a permanent affection for their peculiar objects is fastened in the mind, a well grounded conviction of their importance secures', and withal the requisite skill and experience, to follow the example of those who have gone before them in labours and enterprises for the benefit of others. The mover of this resolution has done well in expressing his opinion, that a special intimation should be given by the society, that it looks to young men for subscribers to its funds, for students in the Chinese language, and for successors in the management of its affairs. Mr. Lay rejoiced to learn that the number of those who bestow their leisure upon the Chinese language is increasing, and intimated his belief, that literary and scientific men at home will take up the study, when they shall have found, that its difficulty lies mainly in the preposterous manner in which it has been pursued, the want of European teachers, and the discouragements that have been thrown in its way. He believed that the literature of China presents a most curious and interesting field for antiquarian research, where the origin and first principles of many sciences may be found, which, while they will furnish a nomenclature adequate for all purposes of definition, will also afford stocks for the engrafting of western arts and discoveries.

On the Motion of J. Matheson, Esq., seconded by G. T. Lay, Esq, it was Resolved,—That Mr. Morrison's official engagements often calling him away from Canton, and sometimes standing in the way of the performance of his duties as Secretary, an officer be added to the committee, under the designation of joint English Secretary; and that, as a necessary consequence, the following alteration be made in the ninth regulation, viz., in place of the words three Secretataries, two Chinese and one English,"—these words: "four Secretaries, two Chinese and two English."

On the Motion of Alexander Matheson, Esq, seconded by E. Moller, Esq, it was—

Resolved,—That the following gentlemen be appointed office-bearers for the ensuing year, viz,

J. C. Green, Esq. . . . . President.
J. Matheson, Esq. . . . . Treasurer.

On the Motion of J. Matheson, Esq., seconded by G. T. Lay Esq., a vote was passed of thanks to the Secretaries for their services to the Society.

On the Motion of Alexander Matheson, Esq., seconded by E. Moller, Esq., a vote was passed of thanks to Mr. Turner for his services in the chair and as President.

The meeting was then dissolved.

From 7 h. to 7 h. 45 m. six meteors descended nearly vertically from a little to the east of the Zenith. The observations were then discontinued for two hours and afterwards resumed till 5 o'clock A. M.

1 h. 38 m. Two small meteors. 1 h 35 m. meteor from zeta in the foot of Perseus S. W.

At 1 h. o'clock, it began to be cloudy at intervals and from 2 o'c A. M. the sky was perfectly obscured was the remainder of the night.

The thermometer varied from 70° to 69°. Slight southerly winds prevailed the following morning, and about 2. P. M. the sky became clear and then blew again from Northward.

3 h. 48 m. ,, from Leo to Eastward.
4 h. 52 m. ,, the last and brightest of the night, course from zeta in the foot of Perseus to W. parallel with the plaue of the horizon.

From one o'c till half past three, it was cloudy, when it became clear for the remainder of the night. The thermometer, 73° and 79°. Nov. 14th. The weather continued pleasant during the day, but at sunset there was a very sensible change in the atmosphere. The wind blew strong from North and the clouds appeared tempestuous, but soon passed over. At several times during the evening till 11 o'c. a lookout was kept but not a meteor seen. The same has been true for five or six succeeding nights. The meteors of the 13th, with few exceptions, were very similar to each other. They bore no comparison with the splendid meteoric shower of Nov. 12th, 1838, which I fortunately witnessed in America, yet they were more than ordinary. Thirty one were witnessed in the quick succession of half a minute, and one minute, others at longer intervals during the few hours of clear sky of the night.

It is worthy of particular notice, that several gentlemen who left Macao on the night of the 14th at 1 o'c. A. M. observed an atmospheric phenomenon in the North West, described by one of them as resembling the Aurora Borealis at he had witnessed it in the Shetlands, except the corona did not past each other from right to left, but shot perpendicularly upwards to an angle of 45°, and the light was of a paler color. Abundant time was afforded to satisfy the observers that the phenomenon was in the atmosphere.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 1st Dec.

We have had no arrivals during the week. We beg to refer our readers to the communication from the Rev. Doctor Parker, concerning observations of Meteors or shooting stars, taken on the nights of 13th and 14th November. Our readers will remember that a few weeks ago Doctor Parker drew the attention of the public to this subject, by means of a letter addressed to us, and which then we published.

The first annual meeting of the members of the Medical Missionary Society was held on Thursday last of which we shall lay an account before our readers in our next, and now refer them to the ample one of that of the members os the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge in China.

The contest between the two oared wherries, the Witch & Flower of Yarrow, was decided on Thursday afternoon last, after a remarkably well contested race in favor of the Flower of Yarrow, she beating her antagonist by about two boats lengths. Another race between two gigs, the Fanny and the Gipsy is to come off in a few days, the latter to be pulled by Chinamen, and the former by English sailors, we believe.

In another column will be found a Memorial addressed by the majority of Creditors to the Hingtae and King-kua Hongs, to H. M. Secretary for Foreign Affairs, acquainting him, with reference to the memorial addressed to him in March last by the same parties, with the progress made in the settlement of these accounts.

The following are translations of Chops received during the week, addressed by the Hong merchants, the first to private individuals, and the latter to the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, complaining of the practice of smuggling of Opium as exposing the Hong merchants themselves to punishment in case of detection. We believe the apprehensions expressed by them to be by no means without foundation, and cannot wonder that they should be roused into taking steps for self-defence.

To ——,

A respectful Communication.

By the ancient laws and repeated edicts from Government the large decked schooners are prohibited coming to Canton, and small open Boats are obliged to apply at the Custom House stations for passports and examination. We, your younger brethren, have repeatedly sent copies of said edicts to the several foreign merchants, for their guidance and obedience. Lately however large decked boats have been constantly coming and going, doubtless for the purpose of bringing up Opium and smuggling. The smuggled goods are carried up to the foreign dwellings and, should a discovery and consequent seizure take place, we, the landlords, shall become involved. This is no trifling matter.

We, your younger brethren, have provided these factories for your habitations, under the impression that you, benevolent elder brother, are an honorable and upright character, and are incapable of smuggling Opium or any other article. But should you by any chance engage in such doings, and discovery and seizure ensue, we, your younger brethren, regardless of our friendship for you, will immediately report same to H. E. the Governor, turn you out of our house, and no longer do any business whatever with you.

It is impossible that the compradors and domestics should be ignorant when smuggling is going forward; if, therefore, there are any such who are aware of the fact, and yet remain in your houses, or assist in the transaction, we will instantly petition the Governor that they may be apprehended and punished.

Our letter may appear harsh and uncivil to you, but it is well known that we have received the most imperative orders from Government to put a stop to smuggling, and when, without any fault of our own, we are involved by your actions in trouble, we must lay aside all regard for you and consult our own safety. We trust therefore that you will not take offence at it, and request that you will favor us with a reply.

It is for this we write, and with compliments, remain, &c., &c.,

The Hong merchants.

Nov. 27th, 1838.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce
&c. &c. &c,

A respectul communication:

By the ancient laws and repeated edicts from Government the large decked schooners are prohibited coming to Canton, and the small open boats are obliged to apply at the Customhouse stations for passports and examination. We, your younger brethren, have repeatedly sent copies of these edicts to the several foreign merchants for their guidance and obedience; Yet, notwithstanding, the large boats are constantly coming and going, doubtless for the purpose of bringing up Opium and smuggling. On arrival at Canton the smuggled goods are carried up to the foreign dwellings; a discovery and seizure takes place, and we, the land-lords, are involved.

Desirous of gain, parties bring up Opium, utterly regardless of the trouble they bring others into, so long as they themselves gain benefit thereby. Such are indeed very shameless characters, and are far from being upright or honorable men. Seeing that they are not honorable men, we, your younger brethren, are determined no longer to suffer on their account; and the very next time any smuggling is attempted, we will forthwith report same to H. E. the Governor, turn the parties out of our houses, and no longer do any business whatever with them.

It is impossible that the Compradors and domestics can be ignorant when smuggling is going forward in their factory; if therefore they chose to remain in the employ of foreign smugglers, and even assist them in their operations, we shall petition the Government that they may be apprehended and punished.

We shall placard the streets in every direction with the names of the debased and shameless foreign smugglers, that all Canton may know who they are. We, your younger brethren, cannot be accused of want of regard for you. Our letter may appear harsh and uncivil, but it is well known that we have received the most imperative orders from Government to put a stop to smuggling. It is really no trifling matter to be involved in punishment by the misdeeds of the foreigners without any fault of our own; we must therefore lay aside all regard for them and consult our own safety.

We trust you will not take offence at us, and request you, virtuous elder brethren, to make the contents of this letter known to all foreign residents for their guidance and obedience; and also to have this published in the newspapers for general information. By conducting the trade in the regular and honorable course, all our affairs will flow on in a mutual stream of peace and harmony, and our gratitude to you all will be extreme for your exalted goodness.

By returning an early answer to this letter which we feel bound to send for your information, you will greatly oblige us. It is for this purpose we write and with compliments remain

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There is a little improvement in Grey LONG-CLOTHS—about 3'00 pieces of fair quality were sold during the week at from 4 @ 4.15. and white of middling quality at 4.40. In COTTON YARN, nothing is doing.

WOOLLENS.—The market has continued steady—a sale of 600 pieces of SPANISH STRIPES, at about 1.40 is the only transaction reported.

METALS.—No alteration.

STAPLE PRODUCE.—There has been no late importation and the prices of BETELNUT, PEPPER and RATTANS, remain the same. TIN, has still further advanced from the short stock.

COTTON.—We have not a single transaction to report, and, although we do not alter quotations, they must be considered nearly nominal, particularly for Bengal and Madras. The present stock is estimated at about Bombay, 70,000; Bengal, 18 000; Madras, 15,000; in all 103,000 bales,

OPIUM.—The brokers began to receive from their alarm caused by the Edict which now there seems every reason to believe a forgery, when the Vice roy returned to Canton three days ago His arrival has been followed by the seizure of several Chinchew merchants, owners, it is said, of the Junks seized to the northward, so that some Edict must have been received by the Vice-roy, but its purport has not transpired. There is consequently nothing doing in the drug, and prices have declined and are nearly nominal. The deliveries at Lintin to the 22d were, Patna old, 45, new, 42; Benares, old 12½, new 12; Malwa 431; Total 542½ chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—about 200 more bales have come down, and 3 or 400 are shortly expected—the holders show no disposition to sell.

TEA.—We hear that a few Chops of Orange Pekoe have been bought during the week at our quotations. No other transactions have been reported.

ART. V. Sin pun keën yang yen, 'A new paper remonstrating against the use of opium,' rehearsed by a blind Chinese.

From the Chinese Repository.

The present age cannot be compared with those which are past! Why is it that recently the practice of smoking opium has become so prevalent? This thing is a dire calamity, planted among us by foreigners. It has destroyed, of the sons of our flowery land, tens of thousands. Why do you, dear husband, while so cheerful and active, run into the snare? Some, forsooth, tell you it is fashionable and can be enjoyed secretly in blithesome conversation. Others may tell you the drug is the quintessence of poison, consisting chiefly of the exuvim of birds and beasts, compounded with arsenic. This, being done far off in the other hemisphere, I have not seen with my own eyes. Yet I know the use of it destroys the body and dissipates money to no advantage. On it many have squandered all their patrimony, and so changed their visages, that, ere they have put off this earthy frame, they become just like the ghost of Le, with his iron staff. As they go in and out you may always see their faces covered with pimples like musquito bites. Their secretions too are all dried up; and posterity will surely fall them. Their kindred look to them in vain for help, and it is with great difficulty they can move a single step.

Now on you, my dear husband, a father and a mother place all their hopes. A wife and little children look up to you alone for support. If you cannot break from its use entirely, try to diminish it a little. Ah, the heart needs to be changed! Could you break from the habit entirely and cease to smoke, gladly for that purpose would I, your wife, have my own life dwindle to a span!

Note. The preceding paper, in the original, occupies two pages, and was sold for one cash, or about one tenth of a cent. Blind people may often be seen seated on the ground in the streets, with a group of men and boys drawn around them, listening to the rehearsal of pape s like this one. They are written in rhyme, and abound with allusions to local customs. The far-famed She King was, it is not unlikely, made up of similar pieces, first written for temporary purposes. These ballads are rehearsed sometimes with a great deal of spirit yud to the great amusement of the auditors.

ART. II. Sketch of Spanish Colonial History in Eastern Asia: government of Labezares, Sande, Honquito, &c; from A. D. 15.3 to 1594. Continued from vol vi, No. 6. By C. R.

[Concluded from our No. 12.]

For some years previous to the period we have now reached, Manila had been frequented by an annually increasing number of Chinese and Japanese. * A separate quarter had been allotted to each of these nations; the former being committed to the care of the Dominican fathers, and the latter to the Franciscans. Among the Japanese who had visited Manila, as early as 1591, was the well known Faranda—a clever, ambitious man—whose fortunes afterwards gave much trouble to the colonial government. This shrewd native saw the weakness of the colony, and, on his first return to Japan, gave information to his master, the celebrated Taiko Sama, one of the most remarkable individuals who have ever raised themselves from a low origin to an imperial elevation. It was chiefly by means of this Faranda, that Taiko became intimately acquainted with the Spanish character,—'their extensive acquisitions and glorious victories' in America—as well as with their establishment in Luzon, so near the Japanese islands. The far-sighted despot adopted the views of his informant, and dispatched him to Manila with a letter demanding the submission of the Spanish authorities, on pain of immediate invasion. 'Acknowledge yourselves my vassals—come without delay to pay me homage—or I will destroy you utterly. These commands I dictate—said the emperor—that they may serve you as a memorial and that you may communicate them to the king of Spain and Portugal. Those who offend me cannot escape, but those who obey sleep in quiet.'

This letter was delivered at Manila, before the close of the government of the elder Don Marinas. In view of the emergency, the Jesuits, whose connections were with Macao and the Portuguese, advised the return of evasive answers only. But the citizens of Manila, confined to a trade with Mexico, were impatient to share with those of Macao in the enormous profits of the traffic with Japan, and insisted on an embassy, in the hope of satisfying Taico with some compliments and presents, and then obtaining a commercial treaty. The governor yielded to this common wish, and notwithstanding the results pleaded their exclusive right to go to Japan, the P. Juan Cobo was appointed envoy. He sailed from Manila in June 1592, and, on his arrival in Japan, was presented to Taiko at Nangoya. At this interview, and in the negotiations which followed, Faranda acted as interpreter, and his versions, whatever they were, seem to have given satisfaction to the emperor. The Jesuits maintained that Faranda made the envoy do little less than offer the homage of the governor; but on this point, it is not for us to attempt to decide between their statements and the opposite ones of the Franciscan fathers. The P. Cobo was himself well-received, and obtained permission for missionaries to go to Japan from Manila, as well as some commercial privileges. Anxious to report his success, he embarked for Manila, in a Japanese vessel, at a stormy season, and was never more heard of. The junk in which he sailed was supposed to have been wrecked on Formosa. The tidings of his mission and its results were brought to Manila by Faranda, who left Japan some six months after. So pleased were the authorities with these reports, or so much afraid of a rupture with Japan and a hostile instead of a mercantile intercourse, that they received the Japanese as an ambassador, though he could account for his lack of credentials only by asserting that they were lost with the P. Cobo.

* Some time before, Xavier had pronounced the Japanese the finest of the Asiatic races. He described them as acute, clearheaded, frank, docile, mild of countenance; but robust, daring, intrepid; in short, the Castillian writers add—the Spaniards of the east.

† That the Asiatic sovereigns of the 16th and 17th centuries were minutely informed of the vast usurpations of European states, and of the excesses that marked them both in Asia and America, is one of those important facts, which we should not suffer to be chased from our memories. It explains the origin, and, we may add, points the way to the removal, of the existing systems of oriental restriction and exclusion.

The apprehensions of the merchants lest the trade with Japan should slip from their hands, and the anxiety of the governor lest the squadrons of Taiko should visit his weak capital, concurred to support this dissimulation with Faranda. The adventurer's object was, to keep up his credit with Taiko; and the governor's was, to amuse that monarch without departing from his allegiance or risking Manila. To prolong negotiations and keep a path open to a freer intercourse, a second embassy was thought necessary. The choice of the governor fell upon the Franciscan padre Pedro Bautista, whose appointment was strenuously opposed by the Jesuits; they alleging very truly, that both the king and the pope had conferred on them the sole right of entrance into the Japanese dominions. The authority of the governor to send envoy where he deemed them necessary was pleaded against these pretensions, and besides, maps were produced, to show that the Japanese islands fell on the Spanish side of the famous papal line, and were therefore properly under the care of Spain and the Philippine authorities. The election of P. Bautista once made, and confirmed by the Manila fathers, the Jesuit convent furnished him with letters, and whatever might tend to improve the chances of his mission. Power was given him to furnish safe-conducts to Japanese vessels, and to conclude articles of intercourse, saving only the allegiance due to Philip II. Presents were prepared, including a Spanish horse richly caparisoned, and Bautista embarked in March 1593, followed by three ecclesiastics in a second vessel with Faranda. They all arrived safely at Firando, where the ambassador, as such, was received with respect, though a persecution was at that time going on against the Christians in the province. Arriving in August at Nangoya, he had a public audience, at which Taiko, in a haughty speech, told of his conquests, and demanded the full submission of the Philippine governor. The replies made to this angry welcome caused the arrogant Taiko, though his altered manner is somewhat differently accounted for by the annalists of the rival monastic orders. Whether it is to be ascribed to the courageous frankness with which the envoy, by his interpreter, declared, that he came to treat of intercourse and not to render homage,—or to the softened expressions on this head which actually reached the ears of majesty,—we much leave, as we find it, an open question. At the dinner which followed, the emperor conversed familiarly with the envoy, inquiring particularly of the power of the king of Spain, the extent of dominions, &c.

The result of these conferences was a perpetual treaty, offensive and defensive, with the emperor, who engaged that Manila should be permitted to supply itself with such articles from Japan as its commerce required, at moderate prices. For the better protection of the Spanish commerce from Japanese corsairs, it was also agreed, that vessels visiting Manila should carry a pass, to be confronted with one kept by the governor. The emperor was also pleased to permit the ecclesiastics to remain, to assign the envoy a house at Miako, and to prepare letters for the king of Spain and the governor of Manila. These letters confirming the arrangements made with the envoy, were dispatched by the ship in which he had come, in March 1594, and consequently came into the hands of the younger Don Marinas, after the expedition to the southward had been relinquished.

We have received the first number of a new paper established at Macao, named "O Commercial." We subjoin the prospectus, and wish every success to the undertaking.

"It is certain, that the Portuguese Establishment of Macao, founded, three hundred years ago, by Portuguese merchants, has been to this day supported solely by trade. Agriculture and Fabric have had no part in the subsistence of the Portuguese subjects in this part of China. Besides this, the trade of Macao gives an annual loan (without hopes of reimbursement) of at least four thousand dollars annually to the Establishment of Timor: pays all expenses made on account of Public Officers that are sent there annually from Goa, from the day of their leaving this metropolis, to their arrival at that unfortunate Island, via Macao; these expenses are of one year. The commerce of Macao is the only means for payments of public works and Officers. The trade of Macao supports our Factory at Siam, Lastly to the trade of Macao is owed the existence of the Portuguese flag, not only on the Forts of this city, from which trade they had their rise, but also through all Asia on merchants vessels of this port. And there is no doubt that were it not for these vessels it is very seldom to be seen at Goa the annual arrival of a Corvette from Lisbon, and some twenty years a Frigate, besides two, or three vessels of war of that capital of Portuguese Asia, that never leave the port: and one or other merchant vessel from Lisbon. At sight of the above, being no more than the simple truth, it is evident that whatever concurs for the benefit of the Portuguese trade at Macao contributes not only to the support of the only European Establishment in China, but to the honour of the Portuguese nation. Seeing that her flag had been the first that appeared on this side of the Ocean from the Cape of Good Hope to Japan crossing very frequently the seas of many ports in the Asia major; now making her appearance in this part of the world only on merchant vessels of Macao. Thereby we presume it to be grateful to our countrymen, that in joining ourselves to the labour that our Natural Right prescribes of procuring our maintenance as well as all that may be beneficial to others according to our possibility, we publish a commercial Paper of this city. We begin it with the intention to give two times in a week the prices current of the day, notices of arrival and departure of Ships to and from China; of arrival and departure of Schooners, Portuguese cargo Boats, of Ships expected and those to sail, advices and mercantile correspondences will have the first place; and other things (ad libitum) that may be interesting to our readers. But to remain in our preference, and for admittance in each paper, such articles when all cannot be admissible. And to give more interest to our Periodical we will publish great part of its articles, in two languages, to say, the Portuguese in one column, and the English in another. The form of our paper will be of this Prospect. Its price for three months at three dollars in advance, for each separate paper 10 cents for the subscribers, and 15 cents for others. The price for insertions half dollar for those of ten lines, and those of more proportionally; i. e. for the first time, in repeating the same half the price. But for advices and correspondences belonging to the subscribers for insertion in our paper we will receive half the amount. We conclude with the promise to abstain from introducing into our paper any thing offensive to the general tranquillity; being ourselves certain that without it there is no happiness, and happiness is what we most earnestly desire the human kind to possess.

Medical Missionary Society.

The First Annual Meeting of the Medical Missionary Society in China was held in the rooms of the General Chamber of Commerce, at Canton, on Thursday, the 29th of November, 1838, at noon. Present:—the Rev. Dr. Parker, Messrs. Jardine, Wetmore, Green, Bell, Heerjeebhoy Rustomjee, Turner, Dhabhar Furdoonjee, Portes, Rev. Mr. Bridgman, Messrs. Blenkin, Lay, and Morrison. The senior Vice President, the Rev. P. Parker, M. D. took the Chair.

The Report of the Committee of management was read and submitted to the meeting.

O. T. Lay, Esq. then rose to move its acceptance, and spoke in terms nearly as follows:

"It is not necessary that I should take up any time in insisting upon the value of medical and surgical aid: every one who has felt disease himself, or witnessed it in a friend or relative, has had the conviction of their worth and importance brought home to him and made a part of his mental associations. The Chinese have a materia medica that is well supplied with drugs, they display great variety, neatness, and care in their pharmaceutical operations; we see them busied in dispensing prescriptions, while the size of the shop, its furniture, and every circumstance about it, combine to assure us, that every thing is done in conformity with a steady and comprehensive system. The manifestations of disease, and the various phases which it puts on, from its first beginning till it terminates in death or recovery, have in many cases been well marked and faithfully recorded by them. Their experience, which resembles the Rumpyria and Tyryalis of Sattrion, embraces many valuable observations, and their practical skill enables them to deal successfully with remittent fevers and other maladies, which, according to their classification, arise from cold or bad air, or from some disturbance of the healthy equilibrium. But where disease assumes a malignant character, where its treatment depends upon a proper knowledge of the situation and function of the parts affected, an extirpation is called for, it is clear, that it is far beyond their reach, and must be left to take its own course, with the certainty that it could only be made worse by their interference. It is here that the man with the enlightened knowledge and the surgical adroitness of the west finds an appropriate field, and does that for a Chinese which no native practitioner can do for him.

But there are other advantages, besides the relief of human suffering, however great that may be, which are intimately connected with the objects of this Society, and deserve our most attentive consideration.

In the first place, it teaches us what the Chinese really are. We have become accustomed to hear of their prejudices, their exclusive spirit, their repugnance to, and distrust of, foreigners. Now, in this respect our hearsays and all our surmises are completely overset by what we may see any day at our hospitals. Crowds of Chinese of both sexes, afflicted with all kinds of disorders, soliciting aid in the attitude of respect and humility, and listening to advice and assurances as if nothing but absolute truth could fall from the lips of the physician. To behold a female, unaccompanied perhaps by a single friend, of relative, brought in and tied hand and foot to the operator's table, and there submit to a most painful operation, without uttering a sigh or a groan, teaches us, in terms that can neither be misunderstood nor prevaricated, that a Chinese, upon proper grounds, is able to exercise that most unbounded confidence in the wisdom and goodness of the stranger. We learn, what I rejoice to find proofs of from different quarters, that he has a most keen perception of what is good for him and courage to embrace it, whenever it can be made apparent to him: that he has a stock of good sense and good feeling upon which his social prosperity is based: and so we arrive at a discovery, which, whether we seek to make him wiser by our sciences, or better by our religion, opens to us prospects of the most encouraging and delightful character.

In the second place, it makes the Chinese acquainted with the authentic nature of our principles, and the kindness of our feelings towards them. A most necessary preliminary is the work of doing them good, whether it be in matters touching this world or that which is to come. There is nothing more obvious than that a Chinese entirely misunderstands our character and situation; he thinks we have no institutions for learning, are strangers to the softer refinements and courtesies of life, and recognise no moral distinctions, are unconscious of the intrinsic beauty of a virtuous action. When assured that he labors under a mistake, he bears with incredulity in his looks, when he witnesses proof of wisdom and goodness, he is filled with wonder and surprize. We find by experience, that he is not apt to forget either our good words or our good deeds, but if there were any oblivious tendency in this way, it would be corrected by the restoration of sight to the blind, the removal of excrescences that preyed upon the vitals of the sufferer, and so on: for he hears a testimony which he will convey to his grave, written with indelible characters upon his body, that China, with a swarming population, cannot produce a man, that can at once vie in skill and humanity with the stranger. Where could we find a better pledge, a better earnest to assure them, that our science is founded on truth, our religion full of benevolence? If we have patience to give these endeavors time to work, such a conviction, waxing stronger and stronger is inevitable, the collateral result of unknown magnitude and importance.

In the third place, we shall have opportunities of studying the mind of a Chinese, and of tracing all its essential characteristics. We shall find out wherein it differs from our own, what it has in common with ourselves; for a sick person, as by a sort of instinct, opens his heart as well as his case to a physician. In the west, we often see this exemplified, but not more frequently there than in China. All ranks, ages, and sexes, tell their story, and reply to questions, with childlike simplicity, and make good what philosophy would teach us, that to speak the truth is a quality naturally inherent in the will of man. Every thing about their domestic history, ways of thinking, social feelings, nay, the very penetralia of their hearts and dwellings are brought under contemplation, and thus we may gather limits and reflections which will be hereafter of the highest value to us.

In addition to those advantages, we may mention the influence that enterprizes like the one before us are likely to exert upon medical science itself.

(1). Maladies, in their nature and frequency, differ in different countries, at border, which is transient and occurs only here and there in some places, may be studied in all its features again and again in others. The phenomena which the same disease exhibits in one place, it never assumes in another,—a consideration that leads us to make a difference between such as are common to it in all places, and such as are not, and so to delineate with philosophic accuracy what its essential character consists in. If at the same time we attend to the climate, soil, water, and relative situation of the country, with the diet and habits of the people, we give new and wider bearings to an important part of medical study—the exciting causes of disease.—and, of consequence, the means by which they may be avoided. By this means we shall be able to complete our systems of nosology, and to make out a uniform encyclopedia of disease.

(2). If the exciting causes of disease have a kind of geographic distribution, the appropriate remedies seem to have something very analogous to it, so that each country has its peculiar drugs as well as its peculiar disorders, as if the same providence that sent the affliction sent also its cure with its. Each country has its Pharmacy, remarkable for some drugs not found elsewhere, and generally proves after investigation far more comprehensive than we were at first inclined to suppose. The Chinese and the Japanese have each their own, both of which abound with excellent and powerful medicines. Now by practising among the natives, we are made acquainted with these remedies, their modes of application, efficacy, and so forward, by ways that are as good as actual experiment, without any of its risk. Hence we are enabled to enlarge our knowledge of remedies, and to enrich our pharmacopœias with an account of substances hitherto unknown or untried.

(3). Every nation and tribe has what we may call its nation l the rapeutics and nosology. It has some conceptions of disease peculiar to itself, some modes of treatment not observed elsewhere. In principle and extent they may be very humble, in detail united with error and mistake, but I think we should have to search a long time before we found one that would not afford us one fact for our information, or one hint to awaken our curiosity. These subjects would necessarily fall under the notice of an enlightened practitioner, who with patient kindness had given himself up to the purpose of doing good, which he would not fail to record and communicate to the world, for the benefit of science and humanity.

I am so impressed with the importance of these considerations that I have determined to make the system of gratuitous relief for the sick in some sort universal. I may not succeed in my first attempts, but I will continue, while life and health last, to pursue my object till I have attained it. We have societies for giving the Bible, the Gospel, useful knowledge, and so on, to the world,—we will have also a society for giving the benefits of rational medicine to the world. Humanity shall be taught to flow in new channels, and to wear names and designations unused before. Science shall earn new honors, and gain fresh accessions to her strength. The motives that incite us to deal out our good things to all mankind are of the highest and noblest kind, while the success that waits upon every attempt invites us to bring all the means we can spare and lay them upon the altar of Him who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. On my return to England, I shall not forget the promise I made to this society at its formation, for I am sure it needs only to be known in order to be supported.

He then moved, J. C. Green, esq. seconded and it was unanimously

Resolved,—That the Report which has been read be accepted, and printed, under the direction of the Committee.

The Treasurer's accounts duly audited were then read, and laid upon the table. It appeared that the disbursements of the society had been, during the year, $1741; the receipts since 10th May, $754; and the balance in the Treasurer's hands $780.

Lists of Books, Instruments, Paintings, and medicines that had been presented to the society, having been read, it was—

On the motion of W. Bell, esq., seconded by W. S. Wetmore, esq.

Resolved,—That this society gratefully acknowledges the valuable donation of works in ophthalmic surgery, the surgical instruments, and specimens of morbid anatomy, received from T. R. Colledge, esq., its President, as also the donations of books &c, received from other gentlemen.

The chairman then stated, that Mr. Colledge, on his recent departure from China, had left nearly the whole of his medical library behind, with the desire that it should be offered to the society on condition of his being enabled in return to furnish himself with a similar library in England. The prices not having been attached to the several works, that Committee were unable to state the precise value of the collection: the balance in the treasurer's hands, however, did not seem sufficient to authorize the appropriation, at the moment, of any sum for the purchase of the books. He went on to state, that the books were nevertheless being priced, and that expectations were entertained of being enabled to meet the cost of them without burdening the funds of the society, or applying for a private subscription from the members.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce.
&c. &c. &c.

A respectful communication.

Seeing the large decked Schooners have, latterly in defiance of the prohibition, persisted in coming to Canton in continued and quick succession, bringing up Opium which is removed up into the foreign factories, by which the Security merchants and landlords are involved, we, your younger brethren, requested you by letter to make known to the several foreign gentlemen the facts for their guidance, entreating them to carry on their business in a peaceful and regular way for our mutual advantage.

Now on the 17th day of this 10th moon the foreign merchant Innes secretly brought up some Opium to Canton which was seized by Government on the river, in front of the 13 factories, by which he has involved in punishment his Surety and landlord, and aroused universal indignation at his wickedness. We, your younger brethren in consequence of the detestable conduct of this man, have placarded him in every direction, of which placard we send you a Copy, requesting you, after perusal, to send it to the news papers for publication, that every reasonable man may be informed of the circumstances.

It is for this we write and with compliments remain.

Copy of Placard.

By the ancient laws the large decked boats are prohibited coming to Canton, and the small open boats, which are allowed to come are obliged to apply at the Custom House Stations to obtain passports and undergo a strict examination. Of this we have given repeated intimations to the several foreign traders for their guidance; nevertheless latterly the large decked boats have been arriving in constant and rapid succession, some from Macao, others from Whampoa, doubtless for the purposes of bringing up Opium and smuggling. The contraband goods being taken up to the factories, are seized, and we, the Security merchants and landlord, are involved in punishment. We have frequently written (to the foreigners) begging them not to infringe the prohibitory laws and to carry on their business in a peaceful and regular manner.

But all men are not the same; some are good and others bad; our warnings are therefore useless. On the 17th of this moon the foreign merchant Innes with a daring disregard of the laws, clandestinely brought Opium up to Canton in one of the boats, which was seized by Government, involving in punishment his surety, and the landlord of his factory; truly such conduct merits universal indignation. He openly defies the Imperial mandates and displays the most supreme contempt for his own reputation. We must therefore refuse, however reluctantly to do any more business with him, and shall turn him out of our houses: We accordingly placard our resolves in the most explicit manner, that every reasonable man may be informed thereof, and take timely warning.

To the Honourable the Chamber of Commerce.

By the ancient laws and repeated edicts from the Governor the large decked boats are prohibited coming to Canton; copies of these edicts we, your younger brethren, have again, and again sent to you several gentlemen, but you thinking them of no import have cast them aside without giving the least attention to them; and a seizure has just been made by Government of some Opium which Innes was endeavoring to smuggle, in consequence of which his surety merchant has been sentenced to the punishment of publicly wearing the cangue, and his landlord was also sentenced to a similar punishment, but prevailed on H. E. by his entreaties to forgive him. You gentlemen have all seen or heard of this.

We have established Hongs for trading with you gentlemen in the hope of making a little money and that all things, may go on peacefully and to our mutual advantage, but by the foreigners smuggling Opium, we are constantly involved in trouble. Ask yourselves gentlemen whether in our places, you could be at ease? There are surely some reasonable men among you,

Now we have been forced to demand some new conditions ere opening the trade, being determined no longer to suffer for your misdeeds. We have resolved that, hereafter, not one large decked boat shall come up to Canton, and all small uncovered boats, whether coming from or going to Whampoa or Macao, shall, according to law, apply at the Custom House stations for passports, and examination. As the security merchant and landlord are made answerable for any smuggling of Opium &c., these conditions are absolutely necessary, and we must request you, benevolent elder brethren, to give public notice that all gentlemen, who on consideration, determine to accept our terms for opening the trade, must give us a signed paper to that effect, when the trade shall instantly open, and we will continue to rent you our factories.

Hereafter, if any foreigner attempt to smuggle up Opium or any other contraband article into the factories, we shall immediately petition the Government that they may deal with him according to law, and turn the offender out of our houses. If you consent to this and give us a bond to that effect, we will continue to trade with you as usual; but if you perversely refuse our conditions, we truly dare not continue to trade with you or rent you our houses. You cannot say we have given you no warning.

On receipt of this letter we must beg you all to let us know whether you accept or refuse our terms, that we may frame the new agreement, after which chops shall again be granted.

It is for this we write, and with compliments remain

A respectful communication.

The foreign merchant Innes being a man who clandestinely smuggles opium into Canton, H. E. the Governor has directed by edict, that he be driven out by the 21st of this month, ordering us, in case of his presumptions refusal to leave, to pull down the house in which he lives, that he may have no roof above his head. No gentleman must give him shelter, lest he himself become involved in trouble.

We have to requestthat you will circulate this amongst the several foreign gentlemen that each may know how to act. It is for this we write and with compliments remain.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce.

A respectful communication.

In our letter of 19th instant, (December 5) we stated that, should Innes not leave his house before the 22nd, we should pull it down. This was in consequence of an edict we received from the Governor, in which he threatened that all of us, Hong merchants, should wear the cangue unless Innes left Canton by 22nd. We were greatly alarmed at this threat, and resolved to pull down his house, that, having no place to shelter him, he might be forced to leave. We therefore invited all you gentlemen to attend at the Consoo Hall on the 20th (yesterday) to deliberate on the subject. Now as after mutual deliberation you all decide that we ought not pull the house down, we have determined not to do so.

Now in consequence of Innes having clandestinely smuggled up Opium, H. E. the Governor has ordained that he must quit Canton by the 22nd instant, (December 8) failing which we, the Hong merchants, are to wear the cangue. However stern and severe this edict of H. E. may be, it is certain to be acted upon, and should we be obliged to wear the cangue, our reputation will be indelibly seared, and, with tainted characters, how shall we be able to carry on trade either with native or foreign merchants?

Be the obstinate defiance of this one man, Innes, to the Governor's edicts, the whole foreign trade is involved in difficulties, the consquences of which may be truly awful. We earnestly beg of you gentlemen to endeavor by reasonable arguments to make Innes leave Canton to day, that the trade may again be put on its usual quiet footing. It is for this we write, and with compliments remain.

General Chamber of Commerce,
Canton, 7th Dec. 1838.

To the Hong Merchants.

Gentlemen.—We now do ourselves the honour to acknowledge receipt of your various letters under date 5th and 6th December, but before entering upon the general subject contained in them it was imperatively necessary that we should draw your attention to the threat contained in one of them of forcibly pulling down one of the Foreign Factories; we therefore verbally pointed out to you the dangerous consequences which might result from such an act; the inviolability of our personal dwellings being a point imperatively necessary for the security of our persons and the property under our charge; we have now much satisfaction in seeing by your letter received yesterday evening, that you disclaim any such violent intention.

As regards the subject of your other letters, we must in the first place inform you, that Mr. Innes is not a member of our Chamber, nor have we any control or influence over his actions even if he were.

The Chamber of Commerce is purely a commercial body and has no authority our persons residing in Canton.

We have heard with deep feelings of regret, the treatment you have all experienced, and are threatened with; on account of the discovery of an attempt to smuggle opium into Canton, more especially as the severe punishment already inflicted on Ponhoyqua, security merchant of the Thos. Perkins, originated in an accusation entirely devoid of all foundation.

We think it however our duty here publicly and clearly to express our disapprobation of acts such as are now forced upon our notice.

In reply to your request that we as a body should give you some pledge respecting the Foreign boats coming to Canton, we regret that we are unable to comply with it,—those boats belong to a variety of persons, over whom we can exercise no authority. It is however essentially necessary, that the community of Canton should have means of conveying letters, and of going backwards and forwards to and from Macao. We shall be happy to meet with you, in order to concert some plan for the purpose; so as effectually to prevent boats thus employed, from engaging in illegal transactions and thus involving all parties in trouble.

I remain &c.
H. H. LINDSAY. Chairman.

By the arrival of the Ingleborough 24th July from Liverpool, which vessel spoke the George IV from London beginning of August, and brought on her letter bag, she being bound for Batavia, we have been put in possession of English papers to the 30th July, through the kindness of friends, but local matter of considerable importance does not permit us to devote as much space to European intelligence as we could wish, or to give a copy of the debate we find in the Morning Herald of 30th July relative to the Bill of the establishment of Courts in China which was brought forward by Lord Palmerston the day before. We hope however to be able to give this in our next, and now offer only the following short notice from the same paper.

"Lord Palmerston having moved that the house resolve into Committee on the "China Courts Bill."

"Mr. Hawes (for Sir G. Staunton) moved a resolution declaratory of the inexpediency of proceeding with the measure, unless there were satisfactory evidence that it had the assent of the China Government.

"Lord Palmerston said that it sought not to establish a new principle, only to carry out, or rather to remove ambiguity as regarded the act of 1833, and the power of extending civil, in addition to criminal and admiralty jurisdiction. If the resolution applied at all, it applied, he submitted, to the act of 1833 rather than to this bill.

"Sir J Graham said that experience had taught him the inexpediency of the measure proposed.

"The bill, after further consideration, was eventually "deferred till next session."

From a cursory glance over the papers we find that the "oaths abolition Bill" was lost in the House of Lords by a minority of 16 to 32. The "Irish Municipal Bill" had passed the same house though with several amendments. We see the death of the Duke of Leeds announced, as also that of Sir Pulteney Malcolm. The Great Western left Bristol again for New York on the 21st July, with 118 passengers, and upwards of 8000 letters. From New York news had been received in England up to the 10 July. The festivities on the 4th had passed off with great e'clat. The account from the frontier of Upper Canada represented that part of the Country as still in a state of disturbance, and liable to attacks from small bands of rebels, against whom it appears, H. M. troops were successful whenever they met. We see that much praise is given to the U. S. government for its exertions to prevent American citizens from giving support to these rebels. Lord Durham is represented as being very popular among all classes, to which his last act of clemency in banishing a number of convicted traitors to Bermudas instead of ordering their execution, has contributed not a little. This amnesty or commuted punishment extends to all but those guilty of the death of Lieut Weir and of Jos. Bertrand. Papineau and some others, proclaimed traitors, but not apprehended, are as well as those banished to the Bermudas declared deserving of death if they return to Canada without the Governor's special permission to do so, a permission which he reserves to himself to give, if the convicted parties enter into recognizances by him considered sufficient, as to their future good behaviour

The English papers are filled with accounts of the flattering reception Marshal Soult has met with every where. The accounts from Spain are as uncertain as before, though on the whole perhaps more favorable to the Queen's party. The Russians are making again great military preparations successfully to invade Circassia, where their arms have latterly not met with any success. The Grand-Turk and Pasha of Egypt are said to have amicably arranged their differences or to be at least in a fair way of doing so.

The Opium trade. This past week has been one of considerable excitement, owing to the severe measures taken by the authorities against the Opium-trade, which threaten to affect even foreigners personally. We have stated in former numbers that Government was active in its persecution of dealers in Opium, not only here but in the northern provinces, and as proof of this in the latter end of last week the unwelcome news of seizure by Government of a Junk laden withOpium at Tien-tsin was received, and it transpired at same time that her people had been prevailed on, probably by torture, to reveal many names of parties in Canton and Macao from whom they had bought the drug. Upon these denunciations a number of arrests have taken place both here and at Macao, and most of the brokers and other natives engaged in the trade fled into the country. It is supposed that the Vice-roy has the Imperial orders for being thus severe and that he is thus active to recover the two steps of rank of which he has been degraded on account of his inattention hitherto to the smuggling of Opium. Whilst matters thus looked black enough for the Opium-trade, unfortunately, on Monday last a seizure was made, on landing opposite a foreign factory of some dollar-boxes, containing Opium. The coolies who, in the act of landing it, were made prisoners, confessed(according to the mandarin's account) being in the employ of Mr. Innes and having, by his orders, brought the Opium from on board a ship at Whampoa. The name of this vessel's Captain as given by the Coolies was by the Chinese thought to resemble that of the master of an American ship, the Thomas Perkins, now at Whampoa, and in the excitement of the moment, without further proof than the denunciation and imperfect pronunciation of a foreign name by a frightened Coolie, orders were issued that the Foreigner at whose Factory the Opium had been landed and the Consignee of the American ship, as well as the ship herself should leave China (Punhoy-qua) who had secured the ship should wear the wooden collar, and be sent with it to Whampoa, there to be shewn to the fleet. This punishment has, we believe, been really inflicted on the merchant who, even had the ship been guilty of having Opium on board, as accused, could not well have been guilty of connivance; but in this case we have no doubt whatever that the Opium came from no ship but from one of the Opium schooners at Whampoa, and that the faulty pronunciation of a name was the cause of all this hasty injustice being committed. A party of friends of the consignee of the American Ship went however yesterday to the City gate to deliver a memorial stating the circumstances; this was well received by the Quang-heep and several other officers that went to meet the foreigners, and it is expected that proceedings against the ship and its Agent will be dropped, though the poor hong-merchant probably will get no redress for his mistaken punishment. To resume, however, our tale:—as soon as it was known that the seizure of Opium and of the coolies had been made, fears of being implicated in denunciations that might be extorted from these poor men, and rumours, that by means of torture they had given in a long list of names of Compradores and other foreigners' servants as implicated in the Opium trade, made most of these seek safety in temporary absence from Canton. On the day following the seizure, all the Hong-merchants were ordered to appear before the Vice-roy, and kept kneeling (at least so it is said) for some hours, and threatened that if Mr. Innes, and Mr. Talbot consignee of the Thomas Perkins, as well as the ship had not left Canton within three days from that, the Hong-merchants all should be put into the wooden collar, and, to make his threat more effective, it is said that he presented to their terrified eyes the eight cangues requisite for their number. On the following day they were all called before the Hoppo, and on returning met in Consoo—Meanwhile they had placarded, as they threatened they would do in case of detection (vide C. P. of last week) Mr. Innes as accused of smuggling, a translation of which document will be found in another column, and afterwards addressed several letters to the Chamber of Commerce, (translation of which in another part) from which it will be seen that they threatened to pull Mr. Innes' house down if after three days (the term expired yesterday) he was still in Cantoo, and that, moreover, all trade is to be stopped until his departure. (The threat of the demolition of the house has since been reseinded.) The Hong-merchants on Thursday last invited the foreign residents to meet them at the Consoo-house; a considerable number attended, and the two principal merchants, Howqua and Mowqua, there related what had occurred, and explained that the object of their having called the meeting was to know from the foreigners generally whether they were not justified in taking the steps they contemplated against Mr. Innes, namely of pulling down his house in case of refusal to go. To this question it was answered that foreigners had no right to judge each other, that they could not take upon themselves, to decide questions which it was the province of the Government to dispose of, but that they considered the proceeding of pulling down the house, with which the Hong merchants threatened, as altogether uncalled for and as infringing one of the privileges foreigners have hitherto enjoyed in Canton, namely the inviolability of their dwellings which, it was stated, had in the Company's time always been insisted on, and recognized by the Chinese authorities. The meeting then broke up, and in the afternoon the members of the General Chamber of Commerce met, to take into consideration some communications (to which we have already referred) made to the Committee by the Cohong. Mr. Lindsay was in the chair, and it was then moved by Mr. Dent, seconded by Mr. Green, and unanimously resolved, that the Committee take these communications into consideration, and report thereon. It was stated at this meeting that though originally the following day was that on which the threatened demolition was to take place it was understood that matters would not be hurried, and that the Committee would therefore have sufficient time maturely to deliberate ere they gave an answer to the Cohong. In the meanwhile all trade is stopped, and is threatened to continue so until Mr. Innes takes his departure from Canton, and until all house holders (foreigners) shall have entered into a bond not to carry on any smuggling trade, either themselves or by implication, within the river of Canton.

This we understand, is the position of affairs at present (Friday morning.) We do not expect that the Government or the Hong-merchants will proceed to violence to expel Mr. Innes, and hope some other means will be found to arrange this matter amicably. The precedent of forcible expulsion would probably have bad consequences hereafter and we are glad to see the voice of the foreign community unanimous for the prevention of such a step. We think it probable that the consequence of all this commotion will be the entire relinquishment of the introduction of Opium by foreigners into Whampoa and Canton, and if this be so, we cannot but congratulate the community on this result, as this trade will then no longer be the means of bringing innocent people into trouble, and of endangering, as it certainly has done, the peaceable continuance of the China-trade altogether.

Shooting Stars. Last week we published some observations taken of these meteors on the nights of 13th and 14th November. On the evening of the 5th of this month they were observed to be very frequent, and we learn that no less than 108 were counted in half an hour from 8 to ½ past 8 o'clock. In the next half hour only 52 were seen thus giving a total for the hour of 160. Previous to this, say from 7 to 8 o'clock it is supposed that even a greater number of meteors fell. The evening was very fine, the air mild, and little or no wind from the northward.

A race came off on Wednesday last between the four oared gigs, the Fanny, and the Gipsy, the former pulled by English sailors and the latter by Chinese. Our patriotic readers will be glad to learn that the Jacks had it all their own way, distancing the Gypsy with great ease.

A sum of from $ 5 @ 600 is also usually required by the Hong-merchant, for securing a Cargo-ship, to defray fees and charges usually incurred by him. On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 939 80, by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 2:0—paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.50—besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

In consequence of the entire suspension of the trade for several days we have no transactions to report in any article.

This temporary stoppage is caused by the seizure of a parcel of Opium landing in front of the Foreign Factories, connected with the smuggling of which the Chinese Government have chosen to implicate some foreigners in Canton and a ship at Whampoa, and until the parties accused and the ship are sent away, no boats for cargo inwards and outwards are permitted. Indeed, the security merchant of the ship has already been subjected to the most degrading punishment, and the whole body of the Cohong are threatened with the same unless the orders of the Viceroy are instantly executed. This state of things cannot last, and some change must take place within a few days.

The persecutions meanwhile are going on against parties denounced by the junk-men seized at Tien-shan as dealers in Opium, and all brokers and dealers have disappeared, and by the last advices as little was doing on the coast as here with the exception of some small deliveries to the westward. The drug is therefore, of course, for the present quite unsaleable, and the quotations of last week are retained.

China Courts Bill.

Lord PALMERSTON moved that the house resolve into a committee upon the China Courts Bill.

Mr. HAWES said that he had been requested by the member for Portsmouth (Sir G. Staunton) to submit some observations with respect to this bill. That honourable member had given notice of his intention to move resolutions for the purpose of showing that it was inexpedient to establish a court with the jurisdiction about to be given by the present bill, unless the authorities of China had given their assent. He had carefully looked over the papers presented by the noble lord, and he could not discover in them the smallest trace of any consent on the part of the authorities of China to conceding the jurisdiction proposed to be given by the bill. He wished to ask whether the authorities of China recognised this interference with their laws? The noble lord was about to establish a court whose authority he could not enforce. Suppose a Chinese were a defendant, and refused to appear, and a verdict was given against him, what power but that of actual force could execute and enforce the jurisdiction of the court? He found a very apt case in the papers laid on the table. A Chinese was wounded by one of the Lascars on board an English ship, and the Lascar was taken into custody. Our chief superintendent demanded that he should be given up to be tried by English laws. The reply was that the Lascar was in custody of the mandarins, and could not be given up, pending an inquiry relating to the safety of the natives of China, and it was argued that if an Englishman went to France, he must be and would be held amenable to the laws of France; "why then, should not the same rule apply when Englishmen went to China?" That proved that the Chinese well understood their position, and also proved the necessity for the English obtaining their sanction before instituting this court. The British nation was admitted into the Chinese territory by sufferance for the purposes of trade, and were bound to conform to Chinese usages, and not to attempt to force their own customs upon the Chinese. In case this measure was adopted and attempted to be carried into effect, we involved our commercial intercourse with China in very considerable danger. The provisions of this bill were most extraordinary. The orders in council were to have the force of law, and were to be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the court that was to be established. The East India Company carried on their trade in China without the aid of any such powers; and the Americans conducted their commerce with China without any such powers, nay, without any salaried establishment at all; they depended on the simple principles of trading—mutual and reciprocal benefit. Supposing this bill passed, could it be carried into operation with anything like good faith while the contraband trade between us and the Chinese (which went to such an extent, and which must exist until our trade with China was put an end to) was suffered to go on? Impressed with these views, he should conclude by moving the first of the resolutions, notice of which had been given by the hon. baronet—namely, "that it is inexpedient to pass any bill for establishing courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction in China, until satisfactory evidence be given of the assent of the government of that country."

Capt. ALSAGER seconded the motion.

Lord PALMERSTON said that, in the first place, he would remark that he thought the hon. baronet (Sir G. Staunton), and also the hon. member who had kindly undertaken to make his speech for him (a laugh), had not duly considered the nature of the measure now under consideration, and the enactments of the law passed in 1833. The hon. member (Mr. Hawes) had stated that he thought it was inexpedient to press any bill establishing courts with criminal and admiralty jurisdiction in China, without the previous consent of the emperor. The fact was that it had been done by the act of 1833, to which the right hon. baronet opposite (Sir J. Graham) when first lord of the admiralty, was a party. That act conferred on the crown the power of establishing in China courts of admiralty and criminal jurisdiction. One reason why he now proposed this bill was, that he thought it expedient that these courts should, in addition to criminal and admiralty jurisdiction, possess civil jurisdiction; and that doubts were entertained in consequence of the ambiguous wording of a clause in the existing law, whether the latter words of that clause, which specifically mentioned the admiralty and criminal jurisdiction did or did not control the words in the former part of the section, which were more general, and which, if they stood alone, would give all the powers which were now required to establish the civil jurisdiction. To remedy the defect or ambiguity was the object of this bill. Now with regard to the necessity for these courts, it was said that the India Company had no such courts. It was true the company had no such courts, but it had a power and an authority which stood in lieu of them, for as a trading company it had the entire control, not only over its own servants, but also over all persons who might be found trading in China within the limits of its local privileges. But although this power, to a certain extent superseded the necessity of establishing these courts, it had not been found sufficient, because cases frequently arose in which, when offences were committed by British subjects, the offenders were required to be delivered up to the Chinese authorities, and the company were placed in this painful and somewhat discreditable dilemma—that, on the one hand, they must either have delivered over these individals to tribunals where justice was set completely at defiance; or, on the other hand, by refusing to deliver up offenders, they must have incurred them with absolute impunity. But had the company acquiesced in the view that British subjects in the dominions of a friendly state must be amenable, in all instances, to the laws of that state? So far from it, that they had had in many instances raked the loss and inconvenience which would have arisen from a stoppage of trade, rather than deliver up British subjects to certain death by torture. It was true that there was as yet no formal consent from the Chinese government to the establishment of these courts, but, in the opinion of well-informed persons—amongst others, the superintendent of our factory at Canton—it was not likely that there would be any objection made to them. His hon. friend, the member for Portsmouth, Sir George Staunton, had perhaps more practical experience in the affairs of China than any other man in this country, and he could refer to the evidence of his hon. friend himself, that there was nothing in this proposition at variance with the acknowledged policy of China towards other nations. It was notorious that China held all foreign states responsible for the conduct of their subjects, and, therefore, if we had not the means of keeping British subjects under effectual control, China would hold us responsible for any offences that might be committed by individuals. By the existing law, the British government had the power of establishing courts to exercise jurisdiction over the graver offences—that is, offences of a criminal nature; and he, therefore, did not see why a corresponding jurisdiction should not be given over the minor offences, which were of more frequent occurrence, and which were the more necessary to be controlled, as their prevention might avoid the gradual advance towards those grave offences to which the present law was applicable. The only extension of the law which this bill would effect was an extension from criminal to civil offences. His objection to the proposal of his hon. friend was that the resolution applied not to the present bill, but to the existing law, and he founded his justification of the present measure on the fact that it was even less an anomaly against international principles than the law which had already received the sanction of parliament.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM observed that the bill was unilateral, for it would be taken advantage of the Chinese when they were plaintiffs; but they would not abide by its regulations when they stood in the position of defendants. He had read in a late publication a remark that all the affairs of the earth were likely to be put in commission, and, if this bill passed, he believed the government could not trust to Captain Elliot, our consul, for the execution of the law, but must send out a commission to China to see the provisions of the bill carried into effect. Under these circumstances, although he was favourable to the motion of the hon. member opposite, he should like the bill to go into committee, because he approved highly of the fifth clause for the repeal of the tonnage duties, and he therefore thought it highly desirable that the bill should pass. It appeared to him that, consistently with the whole course of British policy, with international law, and past experience, it would be inadvisable to pass the present bill. He had been satisfied, from experience, that it would be injudicious to extend the operation of these courts, although, so far as that clause went which rescinded the tonnage duty, he would give the measure his support. He should be sorry to obstruct the progress of that portion of the measure: but, if some understanding were not come to, he should, in the event of a division, vote against the bill.

Mr. WARBURTON hoped his hon. friend would withdraw his resolution, and allow the bill to go into committee. It was most essential that these tonnage duties should be repealed, and the government having given its assent, they were certain of carrying the proposition to a favourable result. With regard to the other clauses of the bill he hoped the noble lord would reconsider them before he decided upon pressing them upon the consideration of the house. In his opinion it would be far better to defer them until they had some further information upon the subject.

Lord PALMERSTON begged to say the honourable baronet right with respect to the dispute between Lord Napier and the Chinese government. The dispute did not turn upon any question like the present, but as to the mode of communication between the British and Chinese governments, the former wishing to have a direct communication, and the latter refusing any intercourse, except, as under the old system, through the Hong merchants. He admitted that it would be expedient to ascertain the views of the Chinese government, before carrying a measure like the present into operation—(hear). Capt. Elliot, who was the only superintendent, gave it as his decided opinion that the consent of the Chinese authorities could be obtained. The right hon. baronet asked that they should get the consent of the Chinese government, and then come to parliament. Did the right hon. baronet really think that that would be the best course to adopt? Because when the Chinese government was asked to consent they would naturally inquire what the regulations were before they would decide. Now, the wish of the government was to obtain the consent of the Chinese government to something specific, and that was all that was wanted.

Mr. G. LUSHINGTON having had a long official connection with this subject, could speak with some authority upon it. His opinion was, that it would be futile to expect the acquiescence of the Chinese government in the projected measure.

Sir R. INGLIS said the bill merely enabled her Majesty to make certain regulations, and it was thought because they were made the subject of an act of parliament that therefore the Chinese would consent to their adoption. The Chinese neither knew nor cared for the House of Commons; they would only look at the subject as a matter of regulation, made by the British resident, and therefore he was of opinion it would be better for the noble lord not to press the bill.

Captain ALSAGER was satisfied, from personal experience, that the Chinese would never consent to submit to the authority of any tribunals other than their own.

After a few words as to the point of form of taking the division,

Mr. HAWES withdrew his amendment in order to let the bill go into committee. He would divide the house upon the first clause.

The house then went into committee on the bill, Mr. BERNAL in the chair.

On clause I. which enacts "Courts to be formal,"

Mr. HAWES rose to move its omission. As far as he knew not a single petition had been presented from any British merchant in favour of this bill. It must therefore be considered as emanating exclusively from the Foreign-office, and that noble lord had not laid upon the table of that house one single paper to justify the passing of this measure. He begged in the most positive manner to deny that there was anything in the opinions expressed by his hon. friend the member for Portsmouth (Sir G. Staunton), at a former time, and those he entertained now, that were inconsistent with each other, and they contained strong arguments against this bill. The resolution of his hon. friend (Sir G. Staunton) declared that it was necessary to establish a court to try particular offences, as between British subjects only. To that proposition there could be no objection, but this bill proposed to deal with the whole China trade. He called upon the committee, therefore, to pause before they interfered with the rights of foreign nations, which necessarily led to the most prejudicial results. If the course proposed by the bill were pursued let it not be forgotten that interested parties would easily be found to whisper to the ear of the Chinese authorities, and render them still more jealous of, and hostile to, British interests. He moved that the clause be omitted.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL thought the omission of the clause would place the house in a novel position. The resolution of the hon. member for Portsmouth was this, that, before the establishment of the court, which the hon. baronet considered it would be for the benefit of the British subjects to establish, it was necessary, in the first instance, for the Canton authorities to obtain the consent of the court of Pekin; but it was well known that the authorities at Canton would exercise no such interference. There were 2,000 of her Majesty's subjects resident near Canton, and there ought to be some means of settling the disputes that arose between them, as well as between them and the Chinese. He felt convinced that if the measure were passed, and it was known that these tribunals existed, the result would be to check fraud, imposition and crime. He thought this would be the case as regarded both the criminal and civil jurisdiction of the courts.

Lord PALMERTON said his opinions had not been shaken by what had passed out his subject; but, looking to the opposition, he would withdraw the bill until next year.

The house then resumed, and the bill was, by leave, withdrawn.

Opium-Smokers.

The City of Canton and neighbourhood is divided into two grand sections called "Heen," districts and the magistrates who preside over these, are called the Nanhae Che-heen, and the Pwan-yu Che heen. The foreign factories are situated in the district of the Nanhae Che-heen (vulgarly called the Namhoy) which extends as far as Punshun. The Pwan-yu Che-heen presides over the eastern section of the City, the island of Honam, and his authority extends beyond Whampoa. Both these district mandarins are much liked at present. It was owing to the bold and and prompt interference of the Pwan-yu that the town of Whampoa were not reduced to ashes a couple of months ago by the Vice-roy. The present Namhoy is a native of Shan-se and a Hanlin or member of the Imperial academy. He is now in very delicate health, and after giving audience to the foreigners at the City gate on the 6th instant in re "Ship Thomas Perkins," had to be assisted to his chair by two servants.

These district magistrates have in a great measure the morals of the people under their care, and frequently issue proclamations of a moral tendency. The following is the latest specimen. It would seem from hints thrown out in it, that there is every prospect of severe measures being adopted by the Court of Peking to compel the people to leave off opium smoking.

Proclamation—addressed to the people of Canton.

Low, by special appointment Chief Magistrate of the Nanhae district, who has been raised nine steps and enrolled three times, hereby issued a proclamation, which has for it's object, the timely instructing and warning of his people before hand.

Whereas the article of Opium has been spreading it's poisonous influences over our central kingdom for several tens of years, and like the creeping plant has gradually made it's way into every province, ruining men's substance and affecting their lives, (in this our province of Canton more than any other,) and our benevolent Emperor looking down with compassion on his foolish people thus destroying themselves by reason of this an evil habit, having times without number issued the most luminous edicts commanding and exhorting his besotted people to exert themselves to shake off this self destroying habit, and walk in the paths which will conduct them to a "green old age," yet without avail, it now appears that the great ministry of state have lately laid a memorial before the Emperor, praying that a stern and rigid law be established, visiting with heavy pains and penalties the determined smokers of Opium.

According to the Imperial commands, every General, adjutant general, Vice-roy and Lieutenant Vice roy, must with the utmost care examine into the facts and consult together as to the establishing of punishments which shall be made known unto all men, and before these Imperial orders shall be put in execution, a certain space of time is to be allowed, for reforming or getting rid of this habit.

The present then may indeed be called an oportunity which may not again present itself in the course of a thousand years! I, your district magistrate, humbly think, that as the smoking of Opium requires periodical renovation, and is not a practice that can be left off in the course of a morning or evening, how much better that you, my people, shall try to find some efficient remedy to get rid of the accursed habit before the book of the law has been yet opened, than wait till the very moment when the net of the law is about to close in around you?

Again, take notice, that our laws in this respect have nothing to do except with the person of the offender, whereas there are at present many villains who counterfeit officers of justice and under pretence of searching, are constantly gutting houses of every thing within them! These wretches having by means of enquiry learned that in such a house lives a person who smokes opium, falsely assume to be soldiers and constables; they walk straight into the sleeping apartment, and if they only chance to find an opium pipe, or a little opium box with a few grains of opium, they forthwith avail themselves of the opportunity to rob and plunder money, clothes, &c., and the unfortunate sufferer dare not at the time utter a syllable, and after the act is committed, is afraid to bring forward an accusation against the guilty parties! Alas poor people! and who is it that brings all this upon you! As for those pilfering banditti, if I can only lay my hands upon them, depend upon it that I will visit them with the utmost severity of law, and one object that I have in issuing this proclamation, is to give them warning before hand, and let them know that I sternly discountenance such procedure.

But at the same time I have reason to fear that some of the people under my care may be so infatuated with the pernicious habit, as idly to look on, and take no heed, those know not alas! their own filthy disease and care not about cleansing themselves of it, therefore it is that I, taking all these circumstances into consideration, put the whole into the form of an instructive warning, and again issue this proclamation that all the military and common people in the district under my care, may thoroughly know and comprehend; If any of ye are addicted to the evil of Opium smoking, do ye immediately awake from your lethargy, and exert yourselves to leave off the odious habit! do not idly wait until the heavy penalties of the law take hold of your persons, for then, tho' ye may truly repent, repentance will be too late! Listen then to the repeated exhortation and entreaties of your district magistrate, which proceed from my heart and bowels; arise and become a "virtuous people, and of abundant age" thus realizing my most ardent hopes! Right and proper it is that all give ear and obey, let there then be no opposition. A special proclamation!

Canton, 8th December, 1838.

THE OPIUM TRADE. This past week has been que of considerable excitement, owing to the severe measures taken by the authorities against the Opium-trade, which threaten to affect even foreigners personally. We have stated in former numbers that Government was active in its persecution of dealers in Opium, not only here but in the northern provinces, and as proof of this in the latter end of last week the unwelcome news of seizure by Governmen t of a Junk laden with Opium at Tien-tsin was received, and it transpired at same time that her people had been prevailed on, probably by torture, to reveal many names of parties in Canton and Macao from whom they had bought the drug. Upon these denunciations a number of arrests have taken place, both here and at Macao, and most of the brokers and other natives engaged in the trade fled into the country. It is supposed that the Vice-roy has the Imperial orders for being thus severe and that he is thus active to recover the two steps of rank of which he has been degraded on account of his inattention hitherto to the smuggling of Opium. Whilst matters thus looked black enough for the Opium trade, unfortunately, on Monday last a seizure was made, on landing opposite a foreign factory of some dollar-boxes, containing Opium. The coolies who, in the act of landing it, were made prisoners, confessed (according to the mandarin's account) being in the employ of Mr. Innes and having, by his orders, brought the Opium from on board a ship at Whampoa. The name of this vessel's Captain as given by the Coolies was by the Chinese thought to resemble that of the master of an American ship, the Thomas Perkins now at Whampoa, and in the excitement of the moment, without further proof than the denunciation and imperfect pronunciation of a foreign name by a frightened Coolie, orders were issued that the Foreigner at whose Factory the Opium had been landed and the Consignee of the American ship, as well as the ship herself should leave China within three days, and that the Hong-merchant (Punhoy-qua) who had secured the ship should wear the wooden collar, and be sent with it to Whampoa, there to be shewn to the fleet. This punishment has, we believe, been really inflicted on the merchant who, even had the ship been guilty of having Opium on board, as accused, could not well have been guilty of connivance: but in this case we have no doubt whatever that the Opium came from no ship but from one of the Opium schooners at Whampoa, and that the faulty pronunciation of a name was the cause of all this hasty injustice being committed. A party of friends of the consignee of the American Ship went however yesterday to the City gate to deliver a memorial stating the circumstance; this was well received by the Quang-heep and several other officers that went to meet the foreigners, and it is expected that proceedings against the ship and its Agent will be dropped, though the poor Hong-merchant probably will get no redress for his mistaken punishment. To resume, however, our tale:—as soon as it was known that the seizure of Opium and of the coolies had been made, fears of being implicated in denunciations that might be exorted from those poor men, and rumours, that by means of torture they had given in a long list of names of Compradores and other foreigners' servants as implicated in the Opium-trade, made most of these seek safety in temporary absence from Canton. On the day following the seizure, all the Hong-merchants were ordered to appear before the Vice-roy, and kept kneeling (at least so it is said) for some hours, and threatened that if Mr. Innes, and Mr. Talbot, consignee of the Thomas Perkins, as well as the ship had not left Canton within three days from that, the Hong merchants all should be put into the wooden collar, and, to make his threat more effective, it is said that he presented to their terrified eyes the eight cangues requisite for their number On the following day they were all called before the Hoppo, and on returning met in Consoo—Meanwhile they had placarded, as they threatened they would do in case of detection (vide Canton Press of last week) Mr. Innes as accused of smuggling, a translation of which document will be found in another column, and afterwards addressed several letters to the Chamber of Commerce, (translation of which in another part) from which it will be seen that they threatened to pull Mr. Innes' house down if after three days (the term expired yesterday) he was still in Canton, and that, moreover, all trade is to be stopped until his departure. (The threat of the demolition of the house has since been rescinded.) The Hong merchants on Thursday last invited the foreign residents to meet them at the Consoo house; a considerable number attended, and the two principal merchants, Howqua and Mowqua, there related what had occurred, and explained that the object of their having called the meeting was to know from the foreigners generally whether they were not justified in taking the steps they contemplated against Mr. Innes, namely of pulling down his house in case of his refusal to go. To this question it was answered that foreigners had no right to judge each other, that they could not take upon themselves, to decide questions which it was the province of the Government to dispose of, but that they considered the proceeding of pulling down the house, with which the Hong merchants threatened, as altogether uncalled for and as infringing one of the privileges foreigners have hitherto enjoyed in Canton, namely the inviolability of their dwellings which, it was stated, had in the Company's time always been insisted on, and recognized by the Chinese authorities. The meeting then broke up and in the afternoon the members of the General Chamber of Commerce met, to take into consideration some communications (to which we have already referred) made to the Committee by the Cohong. Mr. Lindsay was in the chair, and it was then moved by Mr. Dent, seconded by Mr. Green, and unanimously resolved, that the Committee take these communications into consideration, and report thereon. It was stated at this meeting that though originally the following day was that on which the threatened demolition was to take place it was understood that matters would not be hurried, and that the Committee would therefore have sufficient time maturely to deliberate ere they gave an answer to the Co-hong. In the meanwhile all trade is stopped, and is threatened to continue so until Mr. Innes takes his departure from Canton, and until all house holders (foreigners) shall have entered into a bond not to carry on any smuggling trade, either themselves or by implication, within the river of Canton.

This we understand, is the position of affairs at present (Friday morning). We do not expect that the Government or the Hong merchants will proceed to violence to expel Mr. Innes, and hope some other means will be found to arrange this matter amicably. The precedent of forcible expulsion would probably have bad consequences hereafter and we are glad to see the voice of the foreign community unanimous for the prevention of such a step. We think it probable that the consequence of all this commotion will be the entire relinquishment of the introduction of Opium by foreigners into Whampoa and Canton, and if this be so, we cannot but congratulate the community on this result, as this trade will then no longer be the means of bringing innocent people into trouble, and of endangering, as it certainly has done, the peaceable continuance of the China trade altogether. Canton Press 8th December.

Medical Missionary Society.

Concluded from last week.

A series of By-Laws, referred at the last General Meeting for further consideration, was read; when it was

On the motion of W. S. WETMORE, Esq., seconded by H. BLENKIN, Esq.,

Resolved, That the By-Laws just read be sanctioned, and printed with the Report of the Committee.

The Chairman having called a ballot for election of officers, it was

On the motion of H. BLENKIN, Esq., seconded by HERBERT-BY RUTOMJEE, Esq.,

Resolved, That the gentlemen now forming the committee of management be requested to continue in office until the next annual meeting.

The Chairman begged to say a few words, before dissolving the meeting. He would revert to the address made to the meeting that morning by Mr. Lay. Sincerely did he wish the gentleman all success in the efforts which he had expressed his intention of making, on his return to England, to set on foot a Society with purposes like those of this Society, but with a wider range. That gentleman is in possession of the peculiar advantages of an eye witness. Having visited many of the isles of the Pacific, and of the Indian archipelago, also Loochoo, and having for some time resided in China, he can speak of the things that he has seen, and testify of what he knows. He has been enabled to assure himself personally of the readiness of many of the nations, living out of the pale of Christendom and of western civilization, to avail themselves of the medical skill and kindness of European practitioners. He has seen their confidence, their gratitude, and can justly appreciate the adaptedness of such means, as preparatives for the attainment of those blessings in which rest the highest ends of man's existence. He is aware, too of the sanction such operations receive from that Book to distribute which he left his family—the lively greetings of that family may he soon unalloyedly enjoy!

The meeting was then dissolved.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

DEAR SIR,

Oblige me, thro' the medium of your columns, by getting me a solemn, positive, categorical answer to the following query.

"Supposing that the mob had forced their way "into our factories on Wednesday last, would we "have been justified by the Chinese law in putting "to death those who had so riotously entered?"

Let us have no guesses, but a plain yes or no, with chapter and verse that we may know the footing we stand upon, and be prepared in future to act with adequate promptness.

I may observe that the ignorance or uncertainty of this fact, produced a good deal of wavering in the counsels of foreigners during the fracas a coupel of days ago.

Yours,

Friday. TIMIDUS. *

* We must leave the answer of the question to others better versed in Chinese law than we are. In cases of emergency like that instanced by our correspondent, those assailed will not ask what is the law, but what means are best to save themselves and property, and employ such as seem best adapted to the case.

ATTACK ON THE FOREIGN FACTORIES.—On Wednesday last, a little before noon, some mandarins with their servants appeared in front of the Factories, and erected, near the American Flagstaff, and between that and the houses, a tent and a cross, and it was soon known, that the Viceroy had given orders for the execution of a man convicted of the crime of preparing and selling opium for smoking, in front of the Foreign Factories, to serve as a warning to foreigners, and this hitherto unheard of scheme was now to be put into execution. A great crowd of idle people had collected, as is always the case here whenever anything the least uncommon happens, and the executioner with his instruments all ready, was waiting the arrival of the culprit, when some English Gentlemen walked quietly up to the tent, and signifying to the officers that the execution would not be suffered in front of their houses, the tent and cross, etc. were removed into boats, without any opposition from the mandarins who soon after went away, and the man was executed immediately after near the river, at the end of Chaouyin street, next to Saoqua's hong. We cannot but applaud the active interference of these foreigners in preventing this indignity being offered to the whole community, which, had it been permitted, would have lowered us in the eyes of the Chinese, and which, if tamely submitted to, might lead to other and still more humiliating insults. Besides, it appears to us, that the Chinese, having for the past 100 years given to the use of foreigners the spot now occupied by them, and the space in front of the Factories being the only one where they are allowed (by chinese ordonnances) to walk and breathe the fresh air, had no right whatever to invade the few miserable privileges they allow us, by the disgusting spectacle they intended for us. Information of what had occurred was immediately given to Howqua and Mowqua, who protested that they had known nothing of the intended execution, and Howqua without loss of time went to the City to explain the strong objections foreigners had against the execution taking place where intended, and that they would never consent to it.

After this quiet and unopposed act on the part of Foreigners, which the collected mob looked on, it was thought, approvingly, the news of what had been done brought fresh gazers to the Factories and a dense mob was soon collected, which at the beginning seemed to have no object but that of curiosity, when, rashly and unfortunately, some blows were given, in trying to drive back the mob, who then began to hoot, and some foreigners, armed with sticks, charged the multitude, and drove them to some distance from the houses. Things now began to assume a more serious aspect—stones aimed at the foreigners began to fly, first singly, but soon as thick as hail, and though the mob was driven back, at times, with sticks, it was evident that it had gained confidence in its own strength from its numbers, which by this time could not have been less than 6 or 7 thousand. Some of the Hong-merchants now appeared, and requested all foreigners to go into their houses, hoping that the mob, not seeing them, would soon disperse. In consequence of their earnest entreaties, supported probably by the shower of stones which were let fly whenever a foreigner was seen, every body retreated into the Factories, and left the field to the multitude, undisturbed by any police or other control whatsoever. Instead however of the mob decreasing after the foreigners had withdrawn, the crowd became more dense every moment and, in consequence of repeated messages from the Hong-merchants to the City-authorities, some mandarins with a few police soldiers arrived at last. They were active at first and succeeded for a short time to keep the mob at some distance from the houses, but soon after they were attacked with stones directed at them with good will, and mandarins and Police-runners had to fly, being too weak to keep the people under. One mandarin was severely wounded in the head by a stone, fell, and was trampled under foot for some time until rescued by his followers, and carried off the place. The mob were now undisturbed masters of Respondentia walk, all houses were closed, and express after express was despatched by the senior Hong-merchants to the Nam-hoy-yune representing the dangerous state of affairs and requesting in the most urgent manner that a strong detachment of Police be sent to protect the foreign factories, but without success for some time, and the asked for succour did not arrive until after the mob had been undisturbed masters of the place for about three hours. After the withdrawal of the first small body of Police, the mob for some time remained quiet, apparently not knowing what to do next, until it appears that a report was spread among them that two Chinese had been made prisoners by the foreigners and locked up in one of the Factories. This report, though without foundation, was made a pretence for an attack on the houses, and soon all the windows that were not sufficiently protected by venetians were shivered by stones, the venetians on the ground floors were torn off, but the windows fortunately were well secured by iron bars, so as to render futile any efforts at entering them, had the mob attempted it. Their attention was next attracted by the wooden railings before the Fungtae, Old English and Imperial Hongs—these were soon broken down, and their posts torn up and used as battering rams against the wall of masonry that, instead of such railing, was before the Swedish Hong. This wall was broken down, and the outer gate demolished, the posts of which, as well as those of the railings were now used in battering at the gates of the four Hongs. Fortunately the Imperial and Swedish gates were well secured inside, bales of goods &c having been piled up against them, and the battering rams could make no impression. The door of the Old English had however all its panels broken, so that the mob might have got in, and one or two men did actually enter, but, being threatened by the inmates, went away again, nor did it seem at that time that the mob were inclined to enter, as they were heard calling out to one another to desist. The gate of the Fungtae Hong sustained little injury, but several hours had now elapsed without any restraint whatever upon the mob, and it was evident that they were every moment gaining more confidence. Things were in a very critical state, for had the mob entered any of the foreign residences, such was their number that it is not likely, badly armed as their inmates were, that they could have been driven back, and it is not impossible that ascene of plunder and bloodshed would have taken place, the possibility of the occurrence of which we are loath to contemplate. Our readers must keep in mind that at the time of these occurrences all the foreigners in Canton did probably not number more than from 300 to 350 - that they were divided in twelve different Hongs, between which there is little communication; that the defence of each Hong would therefore be left to about 30 individuals only, and that these, from the possibility of events like those related happening, never being contemplated, were but very scantily provided with fire-arms or indeed arms of any kind, and that therefore resistance in case of attack would probably but have led to the destruction of those who attempted it. It was now four o'clock, and affairs certainly bore a very threatening aspect, for it is well known that restraint once removed from a mob, one success will lead to more adventure, and that it is impossible to foresee to what excesses they may not proceed; and it has since been ascertained that a number of robbers, with who in the neighbourhood of Canton abounds, had mixed among the populace, no doubt with the hope of improving the opportunity for the exercise of their calling. No police had yet arrived, all the entreaties of the Hong merchants to send a force remaining unheeded, until at last the Nam-hoy-yune with a strong detachment of troops arrived. * These formed immediately, and in a very little time the mob were driven from the factories, and a quarter of an hour sufficed to clear the whole place. To effect this the Hong-merchants with their own police were chiefly employed, the military were there to act in case of resistance only. Some prisoners were made, and one man was singled out from the crowd and a sound bamboo-ing administered to him, after which he knocked head, thanking for the paternal correction, and was allowed to depart. The police behaved remarkably well—the troops were, we believe, a division of the city-guard, and were well dressed and armed, presenting altogether a very respectable appearance. The Nam-hoy-yune remained some time, having in front of the Factories a strong guard with a military officer to watch all night, and no further disturbance occurred. We must also mention that soon after the mob collected information of what was occurring was sent to Capt. Elliot, who happened to be at Whampoa, and who despatched a portion of the sailors from the fleet there to Canton, and preceded it himself, to be here should his presence be required. These sailors arrived in the evening, after the disturbance had been quelled, but we have no doubt, had the mob been permitted to go on, they would have rendered valuable service in protecting the property of foreigners, particularly as being well provided with fire-arms and cutlasses, they would, supported by the residents, have easily kept the unarmed multitude of Chinese in check. But much mischief might have been done before they arrived, and we are glad that their services eventually were not required, for had they been necessary, much bloodshed would have ensued, and there is no knowing when quiet would have been restored. On the day following a good many idlers again collected, most likely attracted by curiosity, but it passed off very quietly, the police, though present, keeping out of sight. Several foreigners and probably many Chinese were slightly hurt, but we have not heard of any serious accident or wound.

We have thus given, what we believe to be a true account of the events of Wednesday, and they have left the unpleasing impression upon our mind that a hostile feeling may easily be excited among the populace against foreigners, and that it requires only a favorable opportunity to make this break out. It was remarked that boys were chiefly active in doing mischief—they were no doubt set on by those who hoped to profit by the disturbance. Whether the Government will be at all times able or willing to protect us is a question which its apparent hesitation to send assistance leaves unanswered, but we think it the duty of the foreign community to address the authorities in a tone of strong remonstrance, first, complaining of the indignity and insult offered to them by the intended execution of a culprit on the only ground where by law they are permitted to take exercise, and it may be urged that it is repugnant to our feelings to transact every day's business, or recreate ourselves, on a spot defiled by a public execution, the last sentence of the law in our countries being generally carried into effect in places shunned by the community; Secondly, that the Government which by this first act of wanton aggression upon our rights, had caused a mob to collect near our dwellings, left us without protection and completely at its mercy for the space of three hours, and that in future we must therefore look to our own means of defence, and should disasters occur, let the consequences fall on the authorities who by their supineness have been the cause of them.

After writing the above we heard that the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce had agreed on addressing the Canton authorities this day, and we have been kindly favored with a copy of the intended address, which is as follows:

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICEROY OF CANTON.

We beg leave respectfully to address your Excellency on a subject of the highest importance and which has greatly endangered the lives and property of all the foreign residents in Canton.

During the forenoon of the 17th day of the 10th moon, no previous intimation having been given, a party of mandarines and police suddenly came and commenced raising tents in the front of the Foreign Factories. On enquiring what was their object we were informed by the officer in command that it was for the execution of a criminal. Foreigners have now resided in Canton for more than 100 years and it has always been recognised and allowed that the ground between the Factories and the river belonged to the houses rented by them. In former times until the great fire in the 24 year of Taoukwang it was surrounded and enclosed by walls. In fact it appertains to the Factories for which we pay a yearly rent. In proof of which we beg to point out that above and below on both sides of the river the ground in front of a Hong belongs to the same and is enclosed; as regards the Dutch and English Factories this is the case, but in front of the others it has been kept open for mutual convenience and to afford some place on which we might take exercise in peace and security, such an event as its being turned into a public place of execution was never heard of or contemplated.

On hearing therefore what was to be done, we could view the matter in no other light than as a direct violation of established tenures. The minds of all foreigners were greatly excited, they assembled in the square and there plainly but peacefully pointed out to the officers in charge that such an occurrence could not be tolerated, and that we could not answer for the consequences if it were persisted in. No violence of any sort was committed and the officers of government desisted in their preparations and withdrew.

At the same time representations of like purport were made to the Hong merchants who promised without loss of time to lay the matter before the proper authorities, it was also pointed out to them most strongly that the square was filled with many thousands of the lower classes of the people and that it was apprehended a disturbance might take place unless a body of the police was immediately sent to disperse the people and prevent disorder.

This precaution was neglected, and though all the senior residents exerted themselves to prevent disturbance, yet when multitudes are assembled confusedly together, and are ignorant of each others language and customs, it is difficult, if not impossible, to prevent collision, and some trifling disputes arose. Serious affrays must now inevitably have occurred, had we not all withdrawn into our factories on the assurance that the police should instantly be sent for, and from the most earnest wish to prevent the fatal consequences which might have arisen from any conflict between the Foreigners and the Populace.

No efficient police was however sent, and for more than two hours the square in front of our Factories was in the possession of an excited and lawless multitude many thousands in number. The walls and railings in front of our houses were pulled down and demolished, our windows were broken in with stones, at length, grown daring by impunity, they commenced with heavy beams to batter down the gates of several Factories. That of the Tungshan or old English Factory was beaten in; had the Populace endeavored to force an entrance, the inmates must in self defence, have used fire arms to repel them, and a scene of bloodshed and violence must have occurred, thereby involving all the high officers of Government in the most serious responsibility. At this critical moment the military arrived and the mob was dispersed.

We beg your Excellency to give this matter your most serious attention, and we also take leave to remind you that the crowd by which these outrages were committed was drawn together by the novel spectacle of a public execution on a square hitherto exclusively appropriated to the uses of the foreign resident.

In conclusion, we respectfully request your Excellency will favor us as early as possible with such a reply to these our representations as may relieve us from all fear of the recurrence of similar, and even more serious difficulties. We remain, with great respect,

Your most obedient Servants,

H. H. LINDSAY.

Taoukwang, 19th year, 10th moon, 28th day.

STOPPAGE OF THE TRADE.—We make an account of this occurrence in our last, and have recopied it into this paper, the whole impression of last week's having been called for, before we could issue a second edition. The trade remains suspended, contrary to our expectation, the answer from the Viceroy to the memorial from the consignee of the Thomas Perkins was unfavorable, she being still under orders to leave; Mr. Talbot has since presented another memorial which was received at the city-gate on Thursday last by the Nam-hoy-yune; no answer to this has yet been received, but according to the Hong merchants accounts, the Viceroy is relenting in his persecution of them and foreigners, and is said to have told them yesterday that he had no idea to cause trouble either to them or to foreigners. Meanwhile Mr. Innes has, we hear, applied for a chop to go to Macao, and has addressed to the Hong merchants a letter in which he completely vindicates Mr. Talbot and the ship at Whampoa, as also his coolies from any knowledge or participation in the smuggling of Opium of which he himself is accused. Thus it would appear some of the principal causes of the stoppage of the trade are in a fair way of being arranged; we suppose that the departure of the Thomas Perkins will not be much longer insisted on, and that the decked boats, having been ordered away, will be understood to have obeyed, and be, de jure considered as no longer plying between this and Hong-Kong and Macao. Some of the owners of these boats have pledged themselves, we believe, not to suffer smuggling on board of them; we heartily wish that the others will follow this example, and that the river smuggling of Opium be discontinued. It has already led to stoppage of trade, and might have been, on Wednesday last, the, tho' indirect, cause of much disaster, for the determination of the Viceroy to have the culprit executed in front of the Factories was no doubt caused by the publicity given to the detection of smuggling already mentioned.

The following was circulated here on Monday last:

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The trade still continues suspended and there are few transactions to report—there now however appears more prospect of an early adjustment of the points in dispute.

IMPORTS.

In BRITISH MANUFACTURES, METALS and STRAITS PRODUCE we hear of no change or transaction.

COTTON.—The market has declined 2 or 3 mace. About 1000 bales of Bombay has been sold at this decline, the holders being anxious to realise. Almost 1500 bales of Bengal of good quality were also sold at 10.1, for a similar portion of which, about a month ago 10.5 was paid For Madras there is absolutely no enquiry.

OPIUM.—We do not alter our quotations as there has been nothing whatever doing during the week, and sales are perfectly impracticable at any price. There appears great doubt of the real intentions of government at present, and the execution of a man for dealing in opium would almost induce a belief that they were determined to attempt carrying through vigorous measures against the opium-trade. Deliveries at Whampoa to the 8th, Patna, old 2, new 2; Benares, new 32; Malwa, 13: Total 49 chests.

EXPORTS.

Public Notice.

I CHARLES ELLIOT Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China moved by urgent considerations immediately affecting the safety of the lives and properties of all Her Majesty's Subjects engaged in the Trade at Canton do hereby formally give Notice and require that all British owned Schooners, Cutters, and otherwise rigged small craft either habitually or occasionally engaged in the illicit Opium traffic within the Bocca Tigris should proceed forth of the same within the space of three days from the date of these Presents, and not return within the said Bocca Tigris being engaged in the said illicit Opium traffic.

And I the said Chief Superintendent do further give Notice and warn all Her Majesty's Subjects engaged in the aforesaid illicit Opium traffic, within the Bocca Tigris, in such Schooners, Cutters, or otherwise rigged small craft that if any native of the Chinese Empire shall come by his or her death by any wound feloniously inflicted by any British Subject or Subjects, any such British Subject or Subjects, being duly convicted thereof are liable to capital punishment, as if the crime had been committed within the Jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts as well within.

And I the said Chief Superintendent do further give notice and warn all British Subjects being owners of such Schooners, Cutters, or otherwise rigged small craft engaged in the said illicit Opium traffic within the Bocca Tigris that Her Majesty's Government will in no way interpose if the Chinese Government shall think fit to seize and confiscate the same.

And I the said Chief Superintendent do further give notice and warn all British Subjects employed in the said Schooners, Cutters, and otherwise rigged small craft engaged in the illicit traffic in Opium within the Bocca Tigris, that the forcible resisting of the officers of the Chinese Government in the duty of searching and seizing is a lawless act and that they are liable to consequences and penalties in the same manner as if the aforesaid forcible resistance were opposed to the officers of their own, or any other Government, in their own, or in any foreign Country

Given under my hand and seal of office at Canton this eighteenth day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand eight Hundred and thirty eight.

The Ming-sin-paou-keen

From the Indo Chinese Gleaner.

COMPOSITION AND STYLE.—The work is wholly of the didactic kind. It is a compound of poetic and prosaic compositions—of anecdote, aphorism, and history. The style is often figurative; and partakes of all that variety that may be expected in a book of mere quotations, made from so many different authors, of different periods of the world, and of different taste and talents. The Christian Missionary, who studies the Ming-sin-paou-keen will find many suitable words and phrases, which he may turn to good account, in communicating moral truth. But, as a whole, it is by no means adapted to be a model of style to him, either for conversation or writing.

As a specimen of the materials and composition, I shall give a sentence or two out of every section.

1. "Treasure up gold to hand down to posterity, and it is not certain that posterity will take due care of it. Collect books to hand down to posterity, and it is not certain that posterity will be able to read them. It is therefore better to lay up in darkness a store of secret virtues, as the sure plan of permanent advantage to posterity."

2. "The man, who by committing bad actions, becomes famous, if men do not punish him, Heaven will certainly slay him."

3. "Death and life are here determined—riches and honor are from Heaven."

4. "He who acts filially towards his parents, his own children will also act filially towards him. If he is himself unfilial, how can he expect his children to be filial? The dutiful and obedient will have dutiful and obedient children—the rebellious and obstinate will have rebellious and obstinate children. If you do not believe, only look at the drop from the leaves, how it successively falls, and without error."

5. "He who does not value himself, will suffer disgrace. He who does not respect himself, invites misery. He who is not self-full, receives advantage. He who is not self-opinioated, will attain extensive learning."

6. "Contentment furnishes constant joy. Much covetousness, constant grief. To the contented, even poverty is joy. To the discontented, even wealth is a vexation. The contented will always have a competence, and be their whole lives without disgrace. He who knows where to stop, and always stops there, will his whole life be without shame. Compared with those of your superiors, your circumstances may not be competent; compared with your inferiors, you possess superfluity."

7. "Sit in your secret chamber as if passing through the public street. Take care of the inch-large heart, as if driving six horses."

8. "Man's temper is like water. Water, overturned, cannot be gathered up again. The temper, let loose, cannot be again brought under restraint."

9. "The living man who does not learn, is dark, dark, like one walking in the night."

10. "He who brings up a son, but neglects to instruct him, loves him not. He who instructs his son, but without due strictness, also loves him not."

11. "A mirror displays the countenance. Wisdom sheds light on the heart. If the mirror be bright, dust cannot stain it. If wisdom be clear, that which is evil and lascivious will not be produced."

12. "He who is without education in youth, will be without knowledge in old age."

13. "A good prince is generous to his people, without extravagance; employs them in labour, and they murmur not. He desires without covetousness; is dignified without pride, displays majesty without sternness."

14. "Young persons and servants ought not in any affair, whether small or great, to act of themselves, they ought always to ask of the elder branches of the family."

15 "Brothers are like hands and feet. A wife is like one's clothes. When clothes are worn out, we can substitute those that are new. When hands and feet are cut off, it is difficult to obtain substitutes for them."

16 "The benevolent man loves others. The polite man respects others. He who loves others, others will always love him. He who respects others, others will always respect him."

17. "He who is ready with promises, will rarely fulfil them. He who flatters one in his presence, will commonly be found to speak evil of him behind his back."

18. "The mouth is the door of human misery; and the tongue, the axe which exterminates the body."

19. "To hold intercourse with a good man, resembles the scent of the lan-hwuy flower. One man plants it, and all inhale the fragrance. To associate with a bad man, is like one climbing a wall with an infant in his arms. If he slip his foot, both fall and suffer."

20. "There are four things in women which deserve praise: a woman's virtue, her countenance, her words, her labours. A woman's virtue requires no extraordinary talent, above that possessed by others. Her countenance requires not the exquisite charms of superlative beauty. Her words require not fluent lips, or the talent of discussion. Her labour require not a higher degree of skill and dexterity, than that commonly possessed by others. Let her be chaste, innocent, sober, and economical; mind her duty; be neat; in walking and resting, preserve modesty; in her actions, observe a rule;—these constitute female virtue. Let her wash and dust well; keep her clothes neat and clean; bathe at proper times; and preserve her person from filth;—these constitute female beauty. Let her choose her words: avoid unbecoming conversation; speak at proper times; thus she will not displease others; these constitute female conversation. Let her diligently spin, and make cloth; let her not indulge her appetite, in regard to savory food and liquors; let her prepare good things to set before the guests. These constitute female labour. These four combine the essential virtues and duties of women. They are exceedingly easy, and she who practises them is a virtuous woman."

West Coast Disaster.

To the Consular for the United States of America Prince of Wales Island.

Sir,—Agreeably to your request, with the greatest pleasure I send you an official narration of the murder of Captain WILKINS of the American Ship "Eclipse."

From the 24th June, the day of my arrival at Tulloy Pow and Mukkee, and also the day I spoke with the "Eclipse" to the 26th August, I know very little about her operations; however I was informed that Captain W. was many days trading at a village called Trabangan, a distance of about 12 miles from Mukkee. On the night of the 26th August at about two o'clock, a man from a jolly boat hailed the ship in French, and begged for hospitality, saying they were from the bark "Eclipse" that the Captain was murdered by the Malays, and the 2nd mate, who was then in the boat, severely wounded in the loins, who with two sailors, wounded in several parts of their bodies, with great difficulty got on board. After dressing their wounds, they communicated to me the following narrative.

On the evening of the 26th August two Malays with twelve men in each, having a small quantity of Pepper, came alongside of the ship and offered it for sale, as it frequently happens. The 2nd mate, whose watch it was, being particularly acquainted with Labbey Osseo, Jurutoolis of Mukkee, and knowing he had assisted Captain W. in his former voyages, thought it no harm to allow him and his people to come up as they were very good friends, notwithstanding it was then night time when they came up, he told them the Captain was asleep and had been indisposed many days, and that they would be obliged to wait until he awoke to weigh their Pepper and settle the price. He also told them that the custom of the Ship was by way of precaution to ask for their weapons, which they without any objection immediately gave up, and he got these secured under lock and key. After which they feigned to sleep in different parts of the quarter deck awaiting the appearance of the Captain who came up about 10 o'clock, when they asked him to weigh their pepper. Labby Osseo feigning friendship with the Captain, complained of the distrust of the 2nd mate, and requested to have his own and his friends' daggers given back to them, which was accordingly complied with. From his long acquaintance with the man, the Captain did not think he was doing an act of imprudence in giving their daggers. During this interval the 2nd mate and two Sailors were busy in getting ready the scales &c., for weighing the pepper that was on deck. As the second draught was being weighed, the Captain, who was seated by a light near the Binnacle, cried out "I am stabbed," the 2nd mate who was then stooping to take up the bags was stabbed in the loins, at the same time the apprenti e who was near the Captain was killed by the very same hand that slew his Commander. The 2nd mate jumped overboard notwithstanding his wound: part of the crew followed his example and the rest went up the masts and yards, the mate and those who followed him afterwards returned to the Ship by the ropes that were hanging from the quarter deck and went up on the masts to join the others.—Several among them were wounded. During this time the murderers were looking out for other victims; they found the Cook below in irons for insubordination; he begged for his life promising to shew them the place where the Dollars and Opium were deposited; they immediately broke his fetters and set him free and took four cases of Opium and eighteen casks containing 18,000 Spanish Dollars and left the Ship in company with their good friend the Cook. The 2nd Mate and the four Sailors, who were on board, armed a boat and came to me—leaving the Ship without any guardian to take care of her. The Carpenter and two sailors went on shore to join the Chief-mate and four sailors who were left there for the purpose of procuring pepper &c.

On the morning of the 27th we unanimously agreed that the Sailors should return to their Ship and hoist the signal of distress to call the Chief-mate, and, if he did not come, to accompany it by firing a gun, which they did on their arrival on board.

The 2nd mate and Sailor that had two severe wounds in their body, and another wounded in the foot, remained on board of my Ship for four days, after which we took them on board of an American brig that was trading at Assahan.

On the 27th at P. M. Punkoo Datoraja of Tampat Tuan sent his schooner in quest of the robbers, she returned the next day without being able to discover any thing.

I was afterwards informed that the Ship "Eclipse" under the command of the China-mate sailed for Mukkee to take one of the Chiefs of that place to Sumoo to recover his losses and part of the Opium which the Rajah of that country got from the robbers, these he refused to give up.

This Statement contains all that I know and which I give as authentic.

I have the honor to be Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,

Scientific Expedition to the South Seas.

The armament of the Expedition being adapted merely for its necessary defence while engaged in the examination and survey of the Islands of the Southern Ocean, against any attempts to disturb its operations by the savage and warlike inhabitants of those islands; and the objects which it is destined to promote being altogether scientific and useful, intended for the benefit, equally, of the United States, and of all of the commercial nations of the world, it is considered to be so entirely divested of all military character, that, even in the event of the country being involved in a war before the return of the squadron, its path upon the ocean will be peaceful and its pursuits respected by all belligerents.

The President has, therefore, thought proper, in assigning officers to the command of this squadron, to depart from the usual custom of selecting them from the senior ranks of the navy, and according to their respective grades in the services: and has appointed lieutenant Charles Wilkes first officer to command the Exploring Squadron, and lieutenant Wm. L. Hudson to command the ship Pearock, and to be second officer of said squadron; and to take command thereof in the event of the death of the first officer, or his disability, from accident or sickness, to conduct the operations of the squadron.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

MR. EDITOR,

A Resident begs leave to offer, through the medium of your Paper, the following Resolutions to the Foreign community of Canton.

And in so doing, he refains from any introductory remarks, feeling that to those who witnessed the events of yesterday such would be superfluous. He adopts this mode for the sake of brevity.

Resolved. That the attempt of the authorities of Canton to dishonour our dwellings and character by the execution of a criminal in front of our residences, was a most flagrant violation of the recognised rights of Foreigners in all countries, and one that cannot be permitted by us.

Resolved. That our object being to manifest our disapprobation of the selection of our immediate neighbourhood as a place of Execution, and to vindicate and defend our honour—the honour of our Flag,—and not sympathy with the accused—with whom we had nothing to do, the interference on our part was most timely.

Resolved therefore That the thanks of this community are due to H. H. Lindsay, Esq for the prompt and fearless manner in which he rebuked the mandarin superintending the preparations, to which may be attributed our success in preventing the intended outrage upon our honour and our Flag.

Resolved. That it is expedient to prepare a Protest to be signed by all the residents, and presented at the City Gate by them en masse: Declaring that all attempts like the one yesterday to fix ignominy upon our character by dishonouring our residences, will be resisted by us to the utmost of our power.

Note. This last is more necessary as the accused person suffered near us, and the truth, therefore, may not reach the Governor otherwise but by our representation.

Resolved. That the subsequent attack of the populace upon the Factories is to be attributed to the culpable neglect of the Hong merchants; who, after visiting them, left us unprotected:

Resolved, therefore. That they be held liable, in a pecuniary view, for all damages suffered by our persons, premises, or effects.

Resolved. That the events of yesterday warn us to be prepared for outbreaks of popular fury, and to beware of any collision with the people; that therefore, we will hereafter use moderation and conciliation in all our bearing towards them: But, seeing the necessity of concert and preparation in such emergencies; That an association of all foreigners for mutual defence be formed similar to military Companies, the Officers to be elected by Ballot; That in time of danger there may be some recognized leaders; and, that each house be provided with Pikes, Lances, Cutlasses and similar weapons, and Firearms to be used only in defence of life.

The above have been hastily written and are respectfully submitted by one ready to do his duty in all the above particulars, under correction of the majority of his fellow residents.

Canton, Dec. 18th, 1838,

DEAR SIR,

Pray excuse me trespassing on your time and patience for a few moments, also be kind enough to overlook the longwinded way in which I set about telling my story, for being an old man, I am not exempt from the fault of "garrulous old age."

After the events of Wednesday week some proposals were made for the uniting of all the foreigners into an association for mutual protection and self defence, but the plan seems now to be as suddenly dropped as it was taken up, both on the spur of the moment. We talk of it when in actual danger, we forget it when the danger is past, overlooking the judicious remark of the Boar in the fable, that if he did not sharpen his tusks before hand, he'd have little time for that when the dogs should be baying at his heels.

Besides a natural aversion to firearms and other death-dealing weapons, it must occur to every sensible foreigner that we are here placed in a situation where we are not permitted to use these by the government whose protection we enjoy (except in the last extremity, which God avert) unless we should be content to pay a life for every life we may take away.

Again, any man who witnessed the affray of Wednesday week, must have remarked, that it was not a want of that active courage necessary to make a brilliant charge that caused the utter rout and dispersion of the foreigners, but their total inability to keep their ground under the shower of missiles that rained upon them from every quarter. This naturally induces the reflection that defensive armour is what the foreigners stand more in need of than offensive or deathly weapons.

I therefore propose, that in order to be prepared for such riots in future, every foreigner provide himself with the following pieces of defensive armour:

A corslet like a Chinaman's waistcoat, thickly wadded with cotton.
A long pair of trowsers do. do.
A light rattan buckler about 22 @ 24 inches diameter, and
A Chinese conical bamboo hat, such as their soldiers wear.

The whole of these articles might be provided at a very small expense, probably not exceeding $5 @ $10. The reader may remember that it was by means of cotton-wadded armour that Hernan Cortez preserved his soldiers from the darts and missiles of the Mexicans, and I rather think that were the foreigners equally well provided they would not have been driven so disgracefully within their factories.

Further (and this is an important item not to be overlooked) we should have "the law on our side." The mandarins seeing the foreigners standing on the defensive with bamboo helmets and rattan bucklers would praise the moderation of the foreigners, while any natives who brought such armour to attack us, would be severely handled by their own government.

Again as respects offensive weapons. The Editor of the Canton Register, proposes that each man be armed with a "heavy hunting whip." I differ however with your contemporary for the following reasons:

1st. There is a great knack in cracking a whip properly, and the unpractised would be quite as apt to whisk their neighbors eyes out, as to chastise their foes.

2ndly. As considerable space is necessary for using a whip, and struggling in a dense crowd, it would be useless.

3rdly. If the lash got entangled round a man's neck, arm, or leg, the whipper would be disarmed and at the mercy of his opponent

It seems to me that best offensive weapon would be a short bludgeon, truncheon, or patent life preserver; these are the most easily wielded as well as the most effective in a great crowd of people.

It is related that when the Athenians took prisoners, they used to cut off their right thumb, so that they might not be able to use offensive weapons against them in future. I am not going to recommend such a barbarous practice, but in the event of another row, I would advise any foreigner who saw persons active in throwing stones, instead of striking at the head, to deal such a blow on the right arm or shoulder as would spoil the sport of the said stone-scoppers for that day, and no more.

Submitting these few remarks for the consideration of yourself and friends, I remain,

SENEX

Saturday, 22nd Dec.

In another column will be found a Public Notice issued by H. M. Superintendent, warning all British owned boats engaged in the smuggling of Opium to leave the river of Canton within three days, also giving warning against committing violence on Chinese, and against forcibly re-isting the Officers of the Chinese authorities, in their duty of searching and seizing. Below will also be seen an abstract of Capt. Elliot's speech to a general meeting of the foreign community convened by him on Monday last.

We quite agree with Capt. Elliot that the smuggling of Opium at Whampoa and Canton in foreign boats has already exposed our community to great risk, and if continued is likely still more to embarrass it, whilst it at same time endangers and exposes to punishment the Hong merchants, Linguists, and other natives who are altogether innocent. The present stoppage of the trade, has arisen from this system of smuggling, and though this chances to have happened at a time, when, from various circumstances, little or no shipping business was transacting, and is consequently but partially felt, yet this is altogether accident; had the seizure taken place two months later, the inconvenience and loss of time and money would probably have been very great Capt. Elliot says, and we fear, justly, that if this system of smuggling in boats which are subject to no authority whatever be continued, it is likely that the refuse of the population of the neighbouring countries will crowd to the Canton river, and the character of foreigners generally be degraded in the eyes of the Chinese, who will, from what they see of these, judge of the others; this is a consideration well worthy of attention. The circumstances of the China-trade have hitherto permitted the settlement of a comparatively small number only, and, we believe that experience in their dealing with them, has taught the Chinese to look upon them as generally highly trustworthy, and their character for truth and liberality has therefore deservedly stood high. The consequence was unlimited confidence, and the mere circumstance of being a foreigner was sufficient frequently to obtain credit to a great amount, nor has this, to our knowledge, but very rarely been abused. It is the interest of all foreign residents in Canton that this high character for honesty should be preserved for their respective nations, but if Capt. Elliot's prognostication be true, that if the smuggling boats are allowed to remain in the river, bad characters of all nations will congregate there, then foreigners generally must share in the obloquy attached to their acts, and they will all be looked upon with suspicion.

But independent of this, we shall find that the advantages the community derives from the system of smuggling on the river, are by no means equal to its disadvantages, in fact, we shall see that for the private profit of a few individuals the whole general trade is made to suffer.

We have already shewn that owing to it the general trade has been stopped, and that it is likely to injure the character of foreigners in the eyes of the Chinese; the occurrences of last week have proved that the local authorities have become so exasperated against us, that they attempted signally to insult and degrade us in the eyes of their own people, and we ourselves as well as property had, in consequence, well nigh been at the mercy of a lawless mob. Until the smuggling on the river begun, the communication between this, the outside anchorage and Macao, by means of foreign passage boats was regular, and though these boats were nominally prohibited, no effort was made to prevent their running, it being generally known that they carried on no contraband trade. This confidence on the part of the Chinese we abused, and the boats soon deservedly became an object of suspicion. They were repeatedly stopped at the bogue, at times even fired on, and sometimes returning the fire of the Government cruizers. They cease! to be regularly plying between Canton and Macao, and Edict after Edict was issued, commanding them to leave.

These evils are we think, sufficient to justify the community of Canton, in self defence, to promote by all means the departure of the smuggling boats, the more so as, if they are allowed to remain, the scenes of the 12th December, may be reenacted at any time, whenever a new seizure shall be made, thus exposing the safety of the whole community and of great interests entrusted to them, for the sake of profit of a few individuals.

But how is this to be effected, unless the owners of the boats of their own free will consent to leave? Though Capt. Elliot threatens to concert measures against them with the Chinese authorities, we do not see how this officer can open a communication with them, he having orders from his Government not to correspond with the authorities through the Hong-merchants; orders to positive it would seem, that last year, unable to communicate with them direct, he struck his flag and retired to Macao (vide his circular of 30th November 1837). Since that time no change that we are aware of, has taken place in the determination of the authorities against direct intercourse; how Capt. Elliot will reconcile this difficulty remains to be seen; but inconsistencies have been before committed, and why not again? Moreover, though we allow the occasion to be one of great importance, the gratuitous and unasked for offer made to the Chinese authorities, to assist them in carrying out their own fiscal regulations, would be a precedent full of danger for the future; the Chinese who have hitherto treated the public Agents sent by England with the utmost indifference, will, of course, make use of them, whenever they can become useful to them, but thus far will they go and no farther; let not Capt. Elliot flatter himself that the present occasion will lead to less restrained political connexions. This offer, should he make it, will be accepted; the schooners will leave the river, and smuggling there by the foreign community will probably be discontinued; but soon the Vice-roy will find that the receiving ships remain, that both east and west coast are being continually visited by vessels disposing of the drug, and having found the Superintendent so very convenient on a former occasion, will require the same accommodating compliance of him; it will then be found that the British Agent cannot or will not assist the Canton authorities, and he will thus be placed in a worse position than before. We have already stated that we agree with Capt. Elliot in condemning the smuggling on the river, and his officially warning his countrymen of the bad consequences likely to result from its continuance, well became his office, and was what the occasion required. But when he steps forward with a threat that he will concert measures with the authorities against that trade, he, in our humble opinion, goes too far; were he acknowledged by the Chinese Government it would be quite a different thing, for he would then probably be in a position to protect his countrymen, if need be, against arbitrary measures of the Chinese; but having not the means of affording protection to his countrymen, his powers are ill exercised when strengthening the Chinese in their measures against them, illegal though their acts may have been Moreover, the public, we think, have a right to know of what nature the views of the home government against the Opium-river-trade may be—on this point the Chief Superinten dent has not chosen to give any explanation in his address at the meeting. There seems to be an anomaly not easily explained, that the Government which grows, prepares, and sells the Opium for the China-market should instruct it's officers in China to take measures against its disposal—for though the India Government is distinct from that of Great Britain, yet as its acts are liable to control from the latter, it is difficult not to consider the Opium-monopoly of the Government of India, as sanctioned by that at home.

But we now revert to the question, what means can be had recourse to, to drive the present smuggling boats from the river, and to prevent their reappearance. The trade remains suspended on their account only; Mr Innes having left Canton, and the order for the American ship, the Thomas Perkins, as well as her consignee to leave, has been rescinded. The Hong merchants refuse reopening the trade until all the smuggling boats have left, and seeing the various tribulations and even punishments they have been exposed to on their account, we can hardly blame their resolution. A correspondence is being carried on between them and the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, the latter being desirous that a certain number of Passage boats should still be permitted to visit the river, under a guarantee from their owners, to the Chamber, and from this to the Cohong, that these boats are not on any account to smuggle either Opium or any other goods, and, in case of detection, to be liable to heavy penalties. We heartily wish that such an arrangement may be entered into, the regular plying of these vessels being of great convenience to the community, but without the other boats being made to leave, we fear that such arrangement will not be concluded, and that the trade will remain interrupted to an indefinite period. We think it altogether the business of the Chinese, and of these, as the responsibility is theirs, of the Hong merchants, to take measures to force the smuggling boats leaving the river; once gone, if the Government will only use common watchfulness, their return is easily prevented, by stationing a few guard boats at the Bogue, and others at different points of the upper river. That foreigners should aid them in the expulsion, otherwise than with good wishes for their success, seems to us objectionable.

On Monday last the 17th inst Capt. Elliot, H. M. Chief Superintendent of trade called a meeting of the foreign community of Canton, to receive some communication he wished to make. The circular giving notice of this meeting, which was to take place at noon, was issued at so late an hour, that it was not seen in time by many, notwithstanding which the meeting was numerously attended, by British as well as American merchants and Capt. Elliot addressed it somewhat to the following effect:

Gentlemen, the events of the last week must necessarily have engaged the serious attention of all present, and their importance is a sufficient excuse to my countrymen for having called this meeting, and as to the other Gentlemen who have done me the honor to attend, allow me to return to them my sincerest thanks for the countenance they have afforded to my countrymen in firmly resisting the threat made by the Hong-merchants of pulling down Mr. Innes' house, and to assure them that I have regarded with the same feelings of indignation which appear to have been unanimous the attempted outrage of executing a criminal near our houses. But in looking for the cause of occurrences which must be lamented by every one, and, and which cannot fail to cause apprehensions of a serious nature, we cannot deny that they are owing to the smuggling of Opium now carried on in the Canton-river by boats, a trade which, besides being strictly prohibited, cannot fail, from it's very nature, to draw together in China a number of people from India and Europe of desperate characters, who will bring the name of Europeans and foreigners generally into disrepute. We must then impute it chiefly to the illicit traffic of these boats that our character is lowered in the estimation of the Chinese, that we have roused the indignation against us of the Government and the people, and that in consequence of this our houses have been threatened with destruction for more than two hours by a mob, and that even now the trade remains suspended. Having given much attention to this subject, it now becomes me to explain the course which it is my intention to take, in order to reestablish matters on a more safe and creditable footing. I now hold orders from my Government strongly reprobating the smuggling of Opium on the river, orders which leave me no doubt as to the course which I ought to pursue. I shall therefore serve notice on all boats in the river, that if they are British property or manned by British subjects, and engaged in the illicit Opium traffic either actually or occasionally, they are to leave the river within three days from this notice being served; if they, after this period, shall still remain, I shall then put myself into communication with the Chinese authorities to concert with them the means of their expulsion. I hope however that the reprobation of the community will be sufficient to effect this object, and that I shall not be called upon to take a step which it is on many accounts very painful tome, and, in fact, I rely on your hearty cooperation to put down an evil of which the consequences have already become very serious. I shall now conclude, by observing to the Gentlemen, not British, that being the only Agent appointed by any Government, whose pursuits are exclusively public, I may assume, that labouring in the cause of truth and justice, I am in some sense the Representative also of their honored countries, as well as of my own."

We draw the attention of our neighbours to the communication of "Senex." His plan of providing ourselves with a kind of defensive armour is well worth our consideration, and equipped as he proposes, foreigners, should another riot render it necessary, willl be better able to "shew a bold front" to the missiles, which last week drove them back into their houses.

The resolutions of a "resident" we have no hesitation in seconding, with the only exception of the one blaming the Hong merchants for their dilatoriness in procuring the assistance of the police. This delay was not occasioned, we believe, by any want of activity on their part, we being well aware of the many urgent messages they sent to the city to obtain protection, but to the circumstance of some of the necessary officers being at the time otherwise employed, and on that account not immediately available.

The only arrival during the week has been that of the Donna Pascoa, with advices from Bombay of the 4th October. From Singapore we have received by her the Free Press, of 1st November.

The Vice-Roy's answer to the address from the Chamber of Commerce regarding the riot of the 12th instant, will be found below. Though containing the threat that other criminals shall be executed in front of the Factories in future, for the crime of selling Opium, we suppose that he will be slow to risk another riot for that object. It will be seen that the Chamber of Commerce protests a gainst the Governor's edict. We also refer to the Chamber's correspondence concerning the Passage boats

From the Governor, in reply to the remonstrance of the Chamber of Commerce against execution and riot in the Square before the Factories.

Tang, Governor of Kwangtung, and Kwangse, &c. &c. requires the Senior Hong Merchants to render themselves fully acquainted herewith.

On the 16th of December, the foreign Merchants Lindsay and others presented the following address:— (here follows the address a published in our last)

Upon the receipt hereof, I gave the su ject my attention. Regarding the execution of convicted prisoners, I find the law directing, that they shall be led, bound, to the public market place, and there shall undergo punishment. I find, too, that Canton has its appointed place for this purpose. The object of such institutions is, that all may see, and that offenders against the laws may be warned.

In this instance, the criminal, Ho Laukin had opened a store-house for the sale of Opium, and kept a tavern for the purpose of inducing persons to buy and smoke the drug. Having been apprehended, he was tried, and condemned to suffer death by strangulation. The proper commands for immediate execution of the sentence of the law were requested, and duly received through the medium of the Board of punishments. I, the Governor, with the Lieut-Governor, having taken into consideration that the penalty of death to which Ho Laukin had subjected himself, was the result of the pernicious introduction of Opium into Canton by depraved foreigners, commanded, therefore, that the criminal should be led out to the ground of the Thirteen Factories adjoining the foreign residences, and should there be strangled. Thus it was designed to strike observation, to arouse careful reflection, and to cause all to admonish and warn one another; in the hope that a trembling obedience to the laws and statutes of the Celestial Empire might be produced,—that the good portion of the foreign Community might thereby preserve for ever their commercial intercourse,—and that the depraved portion might be prevented from pursuing their evil courses. Those foreigners, though born and brought up beyond the pale of civilization, have yet human hearts. How should they then not be struck and impressed with awe and dread, and self-conviction? Can they yet put pen to paper to draw up such insane whining?

The ground, whether in the front or in the rear of the foreign factories, is all the territory of the Celestial Empire, and is merely granted by the great Emperor, from motives of extraordinary grace and clemency, as a temporary resting place for all the foreigners who have been permitted to engage in trade here. What have you foreigners to do with the question, whether convicted persons shall there be executed or not? Say you, that the ground is not a proper place of execution for all the foreigners? And is it not then a place of concourse also for the people—the natives of the land? No daring presumption, no absurd complainings, can exceed these! They are execrable in the extreme!

I am led to issue these commands to the Hong Merchants, which, as soon as they receive, let them immediately obey. Let them most strictly explain to the said foreigners my directions, and declare to them my commands. Now that zealous and diligent proceedings are in operation for the suppression of the clandestine trafic, it may be presumed that the executions which will take place, on the spot referred to, of criminals convicted under the laws against opium, will not be intere be few. Though the spectators may be numerous, however, there will always be civil and military officers there to keep them under control, so that there need be no apprehension of disturbance arising. The foreigners, in place of troubling themselves overmuch on this head, should apply themselves to exhort and dissuade their fellows—to refrain from making the pursuit of selfish gain by the injury of others, their business.

If, hereafter, at the execution of a criminal, any presumptuous and perverse foreigners dare to push themselves forward to hinder or impede the proceedings, the said Senior Merchants are authorized to represent the facts, in order that the needful information may be had for proceeding to expel with severity such individuals. They must be careful not to connive and conceal the fact, lest they involve themselves likewise in the consequent investigation. Let these commands be earnestly enjoined on Lindsay and the other foreigners, that they, knowing them, may act accordingly. Let none oppose. These are my commands.

Taoukwang, 18th year, 10th month, 30th day, (16th December, 1838).

Letters from the Hong Merchants.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce, &c. &c.

A respectful communication.

In consequence of the seizure of some opium smuggled up by lunes in one of the large schooners, we the landlords were all condemned by the governor to wear the cangue, as a warning to others, and it was only by our most earnest entreaties that we were spared the degradation. Now this is no trifling matter as it would have entirely ruined our reputation; we the landlords have therefore no resource but to consult our own safety in order to avoid receiving the punishment of crimes while we are innocent.

Every tenant of a factory must therefore give us a bond that he will not engage in smuggling opium or any other article in the schooners. And should any such doings be discovered we have determined to petition the governor to send the offender back to his country. To all who agree to our terms we will grant new leases; but as it is clear that all who refuse them, are determined to continue their bad practices, we shall take back our factories from all such, and no longer rent them.

We have to request that your Honorable Chamber will publish this letter in the newspapers, for general information; and inform us by letter of the general feeling respecting our proposition.

It is for this we write and with compliments remain,

The Hong Merchants.

Dec. 16th 1838. S. FEARON.

Chinese Interpreter to the G. C. of C.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce &c. &c

A respectful communication.

The laws strictly prohibit the exportation of sycee silver; and should any attempt to evade those laws be discovered, and a consequent seizure be made, the consequences might be truly alarming.

You must not, gentlemen, hereafter in defiance of the law, export sycee. When you require to ship "foreign faces" money (dollars) by any of your vessels, you must, according to ancient custom, report the quantity, and petition the government to examine and allow its shipment. The boxes must not be nailed up unless a security merchant is present, who will seal them, after which they must not be carried back to your factories, lest they be changed.

We have to request your Honorable Chamber to publish this letter in the newspapers for generally information; that all, seeing, may obey.

It is for this we write and with compliments remain,

The Hong Merchants.

Dec. 16th, 1838. S. FEARON.

Chinese Interpreter to the G. C. of C.

To the Hong merchants.

Gentlemen,

We beg to acknowledge having received, through your hands, the reply from his excellency the Viceroy, to our representation under date of 14th inst.

We have read this document with deep and painful feelings of regret, and though we do not intend to address H E. again on this subject, yet it is our duty respectfully to represent to your body, and, through you, to H E., that the assent of the foreign community can never be given to the execution of a criminal, no matter what be his crime, in the front of our Factories, and we accordingly now record this our solemn protest against such an act, and should it ever again be attempted, we shall consider it as an insult of the gravest nature to the united body of Foreigners of all nations dwelling in Canton, and as a direct violation of agreements sanctioned by the practice of more than 150 years. To future we trust and hope that by mutual forbearance, and a desire to conform to the laws and customs of each other, confidence which recent events have so seriously shaken, may be reestablished, and that our commercial affairs may be conducted in a manner satisfactory and beneficial to us all.

We remain, your obedient servants,

H. H. LINDSAY,

Chairman of the G. C. of C.

Canton, 19th December, 1838.

To the Hong Merchants.

Gentlemen.

We have the honor to acnowledge receipt of your two letters under date the 16th instant and in accordance with your request have published them in the public Papers for the information of the community.

With reference to the subject of granting Licences to Passage Boats, on the understanding that such boats shall not engage in illicit trade, we have given it our most anxious consideration, and we request that you will meet with us at your Public hall that we may then clearly explain to you what our views are, and should they appear satisfactory to you, measures can then be immediately adopted for putting them into effect.

We remain

H. H. LINDSAY.

Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce,

Canton Decembr 19th 1838.

To the Hon. the Chamber of Commerce, &c. &c

A respectful communication.

Respecting your request to us, in Consoo this day, to petition the Government to grant licences to a certain number of boats, when you stated that, as without boats, letters could not be conveyed to or from such vessels as remain at Macao or without the Bogue, it therefore became necessary that boats should be allowed, and you further promised that, should the Government consent, proper and trustworthy persons should have charge of the boats; as our Consoo must be responsible for them (to Government) we must be clearly satisfied as to their management. They must neither smuggle Opium nor any other article; but should they engage in such practices, we must petition the Government to deal with the offender, and ourselves burn the boat.

If you consent to these conditions we request that after deliberation you will reply to us, when we will, in compliance with your request, lay the matter before the Government for their consideration.

It is for this we write, and, with compliments, remain,

The Hong merchants.

December 19th, 1838. S. FEARON.

Chinese Interpreter G. C. of C.

Canton, December 20th, 1838.

To the Hong merchant.

Gentlemen,

We now do ourselves the honor to reply to your letter of yesterday. It gives us much pleasure to see that you are desirous to cooperate with us, in framing some plan for procuring Government Licences to regular Passage boats, and we will now briefly and clearly explain to give the conditions to which we are willing to pledge ourselves sincerely, hoping that they may prove satisfactory to ourselves and the Provincial Government and that the requisite permits may be immediately granted. Thus all foreigners will see the benevolent intentions of the Government and on the other hand your Government will be satisfied that it is our sincere desire to put a stop to the illegalities said to be committed by foreign boats which has involved both you and ourselves in so much trouble.

You Gentlemen being so intimately conversant with the foreign trade, must clearly see that it is indispensably necessary there should be a secure and easy method of communicating between Canton and Macao, both for the convenience of Passengers and to form a means of conveying letters to and from the numerous ships which are constantly arriving, previously to their entering the River. It is our wish to give you every security in our power that the Boats thus employed shall strictly confine themselves to their legitimate employment, and shall never engage in any illegal transaction whatsoever, and, to secure this, we readily concur with your proposal that, if in defiance of all our precautions any licensed Passage Boat should be clearly proved to have engaged in illicit transactions, we ourselves will restore the license which has been granted to each boat, and the boat itself shall be destroyed, to be a warning to others and give proof to all of our sincerity and truth.

Should these proposals meet with the approbation of the Government officers, we request you immediately to inform us, and we will then send in to you a list of the foreign boats for which we are willing to act as security. To each boat we will grant a document in the following terms

"We, the Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce of Canton, hereby give our Guarrantee that the Foreign Boat No. 1. of which Mr is owner, shall be employed exclusively as a Passage boat, and shall not engage in any illicit transactions whatever—we therefore request that you gentlemen will procure for her the requisite permit from the Government."

We would further recommend that all the licensed Passage boats should be numbered and that to each Boat should be given a flag which should be inscribed in large Chinese Characters, and the same characters should also be inscribed on her sails in a conspicuous position. "Licensed passage boat." Thus in passing the Bogue, all the the government cruizers and officers of the Forts will learn to distinguish them from others, and will allow them to pass in security.

Trusting that you will be enabled to procure the sanction of the Provincial Govrnment to these arrangements at an early period, we remain

Your Obedient Servants,

H. H. LINDSAY.

Chairman of the Genl. Chamber of Commerce.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The trade is not yet opened, but hopes are now held out that it will take place in two or three days.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—There have been no transactions during the week in either Longcloths and Cotton Yarn and prices are said to have rather declined again.

Woollens.—The price of Spanish Stripes continues steady at 1.30 @ 1.40. according to quality. Holders appear firm for an advance, and no sales are reported during the week. Longells have declined and cannot be quoted higher than 8½ for assorted colors of good quality.

Metals.—We hear of no transactions or alterations in Iron. Lead is rather more in demand.

Straits Produce.—There are no further importations of Betelnut, Rattans, and Tin. the price for which, provided the supplies are moderate, may be expected to be maintained. Pepper not so firm, and a small cargo of about 3000 Piculs reported at Macao, will hardly realize our quotation.

Sandalwood.—from the supply being large during the season and the demand for the northern market short, has declined a little.

Cotton.—The market for all descriptions is very dull, and prices declining. It was reported that the accounts from Bombay of injury to the new crop would have had a favorable effect, but the reports are very contradictory, several letters stating that sufficient rain had at length fallen to restore the plants; and holders here have generally acted upon this impression, as in addition to the sales of last week upwards of 4000 bales of Bombay have been disposed of within these few days, and the cargo of the Duke of Lancaster consisting of Bandu, Oomrawutty, Dholera, and Broachaghur with a considerable portion of the first, but all of indifferent quality, was disposed of as low as 8. 5. For Bengal and Madras no enquiry.

Opium.—This trade wears a more serious aspect than at any period even during the past year. The execution of a dealer in the drug has been followed up by an edict promulgating the new law that dealing and smuggling in Opium is now punishable by death. Whether these severe measures will be acted upon remains to be seen, but the immediate effect is, of course, a total cessation of all traffic in Opium here, and the general trade continues suspended until the Schooners all leave the river. Deliveries at Lintin to the 15th: Patna old, 4. new, 2; Benares, new, 32; Malwa, 37; Total 95 chests.

EXPORTS.

Raw Silk.—About 3700 bales of the new Nankin Silk have arrived and 200 or 300 bales more are shortly expected. The holders are still firm for high prices, but there appears no disposition to submit to them.

Freight.—A charter of £4.10, to London, has been reported to us.

Canton, 22nd December, 1838.

VOL. 4. No. 17. Canton, Saturday, 29th December, 1838. No. 173.

Public Notice.

I CHARLES ELLIOT Chief Superintendent of the Trade of British Subjects in China moved by urgent considerations immediately affecting the safety of the lives and properties of all Her Majesty's Subjects engaged in the Trade at Canton do hereby formally give Notice and require that all British owned Schooners, Cutters, and otherwise rigged small craft either habitually or occasionally engaged in the illicit Opium traffic within the Bocca Tigris should proceed forth of the same within the space of three days from the date of these Presents, and not return within the said Bocca Tigris being engaged in the said illicit Opium traffic.

And I the said Chief Superintendent do further give Notice and warn all Her Majesty's Subjects engaged in the aforesaid illicit Opium traffic, within the Bocca Tigris, in such Schooners, Cutters, or otherwise rigged small craft that if any native of the Chinese Empire shall come by his or her death by any wound feloniously inflicted by any British Subject or Subjects, any such British Subject or Subjects, being duly convicted thereof are liable to capital punishment, as if the crime had been committed within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts at Westminister.

And I the said Chief Superintendent do further give notice and warn all British Subjects being owners of such Schooners, Cutters, or otherwise rigged small craft engaged in the said illicit Opium traffic within the Bocca Tigris that Her Majesty's Government will in no way interpose if the Chinese Government shall think fit to seize and confiscate the same.

And I the said Chief Superintendent do further give notice and warn all British Subjects employed in the said Schooners, Cutters, and otherwise rigged small craft engaged in the illicit traffic in Opium within the Bocca Tigris, that the forcible resisting of the officers of the Chinese Government in the duty of searching and seizing is a lawless act and that they are liable to consequences and penalties in the same manner as if the aforesaid forcible resistance were opposed to the officers of their own, or any other Government, in their own, or in any foreign Country.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Canton this eighteenth day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand eight Hundred and thirty eight.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.

Gleanings.

FRENCH EXPEDITION.—The French government are about sending a scientific expedition to the Scandinavian peninsula and Spitsbergen, the leader of which is M Gaimard, the naturalist, who conducted the recent expedition to Iceland. It is said that Louis Phillippe, who travelled through Sweden and Norway, Lapland and Finland, in 1795, takes a particular interest in the expedition, and has himself pointed out the objects most worthy of attention. The Swedish government lends its cordial assistance, and a body of Norwegian and Swedish naturalists and engineers are to join the French savans. Some of the party are to winter in Hammerfest, near North Cape. The vessel destined for Spitsbergen is to attempt the passage northward to the North Pole. Thus, as M. D'Urville, who sailed last year in command of the Zelee and Astrolabe, had orders to approach the South Pole as near as possible, the French government will have to boast that its efforts in behalf of science extend at the same time from Pole to Pole.

SCIENCE IN TURKEY.—The celebrated Professor Ritter is just returned to Berlin from his travels in the East, and among the facts of minor importance which he relates is one which cannot fail to excite a smile. The scientific instruments which are so often presented to the Sultan are by him distributed indiscriminately in equal portions, without any reference to the purposes for which they are intended; thus the school of surgery often receives mathematical instruments, whilst the military schools are honoured with those intended for surgical operations.

THE CORONATION.—An official statement has been before the House of Commons "of the sum which may probably be required to defray the expenses to be incurred on account of the coronation," and the estimate is 70,000*l*. From a calculation which has been made by persons very competent to form a judgment on the subject, it would appear that the duty payable to government on the timber used in the erections in Westminister Abbey, and the streets on the line through which the royal procession had to pass, and for illuminations, &c., will amount to a sum to the whole of the expence incurred by government for this coronation. The sum paid by the public for seats from which to have a view of the coronation procession has been stated to be not less than 20,000*l*. Besides the inhabitants of the metropolis who had witnessed it, there were not fewer than 400,000 persons who had come up from various parts of the country; so that, including the foreigners who had come over to see it, there were not less than 2000,000 of inhabitants in London at the same time, and for many days before and since.

TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD.—This curious and important operation was recently performed with perfect success by Mr. John Wilson and Mr. Richard Ripley, of Whitby, on the person of Mrs. Hartley, who was rapidly sinking under violent hemorrhage. The pulse was gone, and not even by the application of a mirror to the mouth of the patient could it be perceived that she breathed; but, by the injection into her veins of a large quantity of blood taken from those of her sister and husband, the patient was gradually withdrawn from the very jaws of death, and is now approaching convalescence.

NEWSPAPER READERS.—Shenstone, the poet, divides the readers of a newspaper into seven classes. He says —"1. The ill-natured look at the list of bankrupts. 2. The poor, to the price of bread. 3. The stockjobber, to the lies of the day. 4. The old maid, to marriages. 5. The prodigal, to the deaths. 6. The monopolizers, to the hopes of a wet and bad harvest. 7. The boarding-school and all other young misses, to matters relating to Gretna Green."

CHRISTENING EXTRAORDINARY.—At the parish church of Knaresdale, Northumberland, on Saturday, last, Mr. John Dickinson, of Esh, an eccentric character, the father of eight children, collected together thirty-two of his friends and neighbours, to become sponsors for them. After breakfast, the morning being fine, and all ready, the party set out for the church, Dickinson, the father (who is a musician) playing several of his favourite airs on the violin, at the head of the merry group, the mother bringing up the rear with the youngest child in her arms. They were met at the church by the Rev. Mr. Bewsher, who, after putting the necessary questions to the sponsors, christened the eight children, the rev. gentleman observing, that in all his ministry he never had had such a presentation before.—Newcastle Journal.

THE RAILROAD MANIA.—To show the height to which the railroad fever rose in 1837, it is only necessary to state, that in that single year, notices were given for 118 intended applications for railway bills; that of these seventy-nine were actually introduced; of which forty-two were passed, and the rest either withdrawn from the want of funds, or rejected. Of the forty-two which received the royal assent, only fourteen were for new lines; whose aggregate length is 471 miles, and estimated cost 6,861,285*l*.; or 14,566*l*. per mile; the expense of working them about forty-five per cent. of the gross revenue, amounting to 1,375,802*l*.; of which, 923,078*l*. is to be obtained from passengers, and the rest from goods.

Ineffectual attempt at Tee-Totalism.—Shortly before the new year, a couple in town (says the Paisley Advertiser,) who indulged somewhat freely in the use of pirits, became sensible of the miseries which their favorite beverage entailed on them. One night when the husband came home drunk, his wife said to him, Johnny, ye maun gie ower this drinking, or we'll be ruined a' thegither; ye maun join the tee-totallers."—

Will ye join wi' me, Jenny? 'Deed will I.' 'Come awa then, and we'll strike the airn while it's het.' Off they went and joined the tee-totallers, and affairs, thenceforth, began to mend. But the new year came, and Jenny proposed that they should have a wee drap in the house—no for themselves, but for 'ony frien' that might drap in.' 'Are ye gaun to break through, Jenny?' 'Only for a wee.' 'Aweel, aweel, I'se join wi' you.' Off the two went together, with an infant in the wife's arms, to lay in the new year's stock. As a little bit of rejoicing at having kept their vows so well, and as a reward for their resolution, they partook of a few gills together, and by the time they arose to go home, the pavement was found rather narrow for them. Besides the wee drappy for the use of chance callers, one carried two stones of meal, the other the child, and these burdens they exchanged occasionally on the way home, it being deemed advisable that the one who walked most steadily should carry the child. On arrival at home they did not seem certain what change had last been made, and the husband deposited his burden into the cradle, while the wife locked her one in the press. By and by the child began to cry, the wife set about rocking the cradle, and as the cries increased, her rocking exertions increased in equal proportion; but all could not pacify the child. A neighbor woman hearing the noise, went in to see what was the matter, and in going to lift the child from the cradle, no child was there but in lieu thereof were the two stones of meal in a bag! The key of the press was obtained, the press was opened, and there was the child occupying the shelf usually allotted for the meal! We have not heard whether this canny couple have yet rejoined the tee-totallers.

NUMISMATIC SOCIETY.—May 24. A paper, by J. P. Cory, was read, being a "Proposal for the Introduction of the decimal Division in Money." The advantages of a decimal division in weights and measures, and in money, admit of no doubt; and Mr. Cory is of opinion that the actual state of our coinage at the present moment affords some remarkable facilities for effecting the change, which are augmented by the commencement of a new reign. We have now (he observed) in common circulation two different kinds of pennies: one of these, the common penny, is much smaller than the other, and weighs about 4 farthings; while the other, the great penny of George the Third, weighs more than 5 farthings, and is intrinsically worth at least a farthing more than the small penny, and the circumstance of these two pennies being in common circulation affords the present faculties for adopting the decimal division. The proposition is simply this,—to strike two new coins in silver, with new denominations—the first equal in value to two shillings, being one tenth part of a pound, and the other equal in value to the tenth part of this two-shilling-piece, and to proclaim it equal to 10 farthings; and to proclaim also that the great or old penny shall henceforth pass for 5 farthings, leaving the small penny still to circulate at 4. We might designate one of the proposed new coins, a Victorine. But upon the present occasion I shall (Mr. Cory observed), for perspicuity, denominate the two-shilling-piece, a Florin, as the name of the foreign coin nearest in value, and indeed a name not unknown in the English coinage; and the other I shall at present call a Silver (1), though in former times the double-penny passed in the northern parts of this island under the name of a Bodle. We should, then, by striking these two pieces, and such a proclamation, without further difficulty, have the coinage thus arranged:—

10 Stivers = 1 Florin.
10 Florins = 1 Pound.

(1) The Stiver was a coin once in use, and in at appropriate name for a silver coin.

The Pound would therefore be equal to 10 Florins, to 100 Stivers, or 1000 Farthings. The shilling would remain as the half florin, and 20 in the pound, and equal to 10 great pence; the sixpence as the quarter florin, equal to 5 great pence; the great as the sixth, and the silver as the tenth part of the florin. The great penny would be the half stiver of 5 farthings; the small penny would remain at 4 farthings; and the half penny would remain at 2 farthings. This proposition therefore combines within itself both the new and the old system of notation. Every contract and account would remain precisely as they now stand. Every person might calculate in whichever notation he thought proper, and every transfer of an account from one system of notation into the other could be effected with singular facility. The decimal division would gradually supersede the other without the slightest shock. And, notwithstanding the decimal division, it combines the practical advantage of having the silver coinage divided into halves, quarters, thirds, and tenths, and the copper divided into halves, quarters, and fifths. The real and actual alteration, however, that is proposed in the coinage is this.—That the pound shall consist hereafter of 1000 farthings instead of 960: the florin or two-shilling-piece of 100 farthings instead of 96; and, therefore, the shilling of 50 instead of 48; and consequently the change for the sixpence would be 25 farthings instead of 24. And this is a concern of very small importance; for the fact is, that the copper money, not being a legal tender except for pence, is not current at its intrinsic, but at a conventional value, and the silver sixpence is intrinsically worth about 36 farthings instead of the 24 for which is nominally passes. And indeed practically we are daily in the habit of receiving between 24 and 33 farthings for every sixpence that we change, according to whether the change consists of the small or of the great pence; and it is rare that we do not receive 25 farthings for the sixpence. The alteration, therefore, in this respect is practically of but little importance, especially when we recollect that in those retail concerns, in which copper money is chiefly received, it is not uncommon to give for five shillings in silver 62 or 63 pence instead of 60. I deem it scarcely necessary to advert to the manifest advantages resulting from the decimal division of the coinage; it clears away at once all the intricacies of the money sums, by reducing them to simple arithmetical sums, obviating the necessity of reduction and fractions in almost every case, and in fact rendering every arithmetical computation, in which shillings and pence are involved, as simple as if they were omitted; but in all transactions of foreign exchanges, interest, and accounts, affording facilities, which can only be appreciated by commercial men. I need mention but one example to convey to every one a sense of its importance:—If we write down the first 6 integers, 1 2 3. 4 5 6 as a number, we put between the 3 and the 4 a comma, cutting off the 3 last figures; and supposing these 6 integers to express a sum of money, the same comma or a point will then divide the pounds from the fractional parts of a pound; and the same figure will express the sum in pounds, in florins, in stivers, or in farthings, without further adjustment or alteration, as 123 pounds, 4 florins, 5 stivers, and 6 farthings; or as 123,456 farthings, or as 1234 florins, and 56 farthings, or in any terms we may think proper to express it. And if it be required to transfer this sum from the new to the old notation, it is done at once by taking the pounds as they stand, doubling the florins, and adjusting the farthings; and it stands at once in the old notation, at 123*l*., 9*s*. shillings, and 36 farthings, that is, 14 pence, making 123*l*. 9*s*. 6. —And the inverse reduction of this is performed by retaining the pounds, halving the shillings, and adjusting the farthings; viz. 123 retained as pounds, the half of 9*s*. (1) viz. 4, as the florins, and the residue, viz. 1*s*. 2*d*. reduced into farthings, gives again the 56, which is the same as 5 stivers and 6 farthings as before.—(Athenæum.)

PROCLAMATIONTO THE PEOPLE OF C/ "TON PROVINCE.

TANG, a president of the military board, an imperial censor of the right, governor of Kwangtung and Kwanse, with authority to superintendent the collection of the revenue, &c., and E, a comptroller of the military board, an imperial sub-censor of the right, Fooyuen of Kwangtung province, and a military Te-tuh, with authority to superintend the collection of the revenue &c.—conjointly issue this proclamation, in order with the utmost kindness to instruct and enlighten the people under their care.

Whereas the opening of an opium shop as well as the selling of opium, is now prohibited by the sternest laws, and punished with the heaviest penalties; but the lawless people who deal therein aim only after profit, and take no heed of their real interest:—they act upon the idea that they may not speedly be taken, and thus sport with danger on the "torrents' verge:" therefore it is that the smuggling of opium has now come to be regarded as a mere thing of course.

But ye must all know, that where a man clandestinely takes the property of his parents to carry on a prohibited trade, where he is obliged to put out and draw in his head like a rat in his hole, where he requires to stalk about like a midnight ghost: granting that even he may not be breaking any written law, yet is he doing that which it becomes not a man to do.

And now again it appears that Hwang Tsootsze, minister of the Hanglioo temple, * has brought forward a motion that all who smoke opium shall be punished with death!—He has already made his report to the emperor, and the imperial command has been received, enjoining the governors and lieut. governors of every province to consult together, and wait upon the emperor with the results of their deliberations in so many duly prepared memorials. This has also been done; and though in the multitude of these memorials there may be some small differences of opinion, yet are they all alike in the main: this one only adds a clause still more severe to that one; and he in his turn proposes a still heavier punishment than his neighbour: among them there are no advocates for lenient measures!

Now again the imperial will has been received commanding the prime ministers of state, and the high officers of the military courts to consult along with the members of the board of punishments, and let him, the emperor, be informed of the result. Thus, in the course of a few days, will the law on that point be established for the being duly put in force; and so soon as the vermilion rescript arrives, all who violate it shall, by that same new law, be tried and condmned! Most luminous and intelligent are the words of the emperor! Where is the man so rash as to oppose! As for those who open opium shops and sell opium, profit is out of the question, destruction is already at their door! Their wealth will be utterly spent, and their thread of life clipped at the same moment of time! We, the governor and lieut.-governor, truly feel for you the utmost alarm and pity! Try and reflect for a moment. Ye are all of you sons of China; and your wealth is the substance of the central land! But ye are now taking the substance of your native country, and giving it away to foreigners from abroad; and ye, sons of China, are losing your property and your lives at the same instant! It was your wealth, but now foreigners possess it; and your very lives the foreigners are now about to deprive you of! This is the first reflection; and still to be duped and befooled by these foreigners and induced by them to carry on this trade: Oh! monstrous folly! Oh! stupidity unparalelled! Ye aim after profit, but to make profit is impossible: ye try to preserve your lives, but even to do that is equally difficult! Ye take your money and purchase Death! Oh! what a losing account! This is another reflection. And with such consequences staring you in the face, to pursue this trade, and bring upon yourselves ruin and destruction, is not this still more doltish than before? Every item bespeaks the height of folly. We, the governor and lieut.-governor earnestly wish to pluck you from the jaws of death, and yet, such is your folly, that we are not able!

We therefore again issue this clear and distinct edict with the utmost tenderness and compassion; that all the common people and military under our care may thoroughly know and understand. Ye must every one of you who deal in opium speedily awake to a sense of your danger and cleanse yourselves of your previous crime: Let each man exert himself to save his property and his life, and follow after some better means of livelihood. As for those who smoke the drug, after not many days the death inflicting period will be at hand. Do ye also arouse yourselves, and get rid of the evil habit without delay, and thus save your lives, now without a hair's breadth of the gulf of destruction.

As we, the governor and lieut.-governor, have despatched civil and military officers in every direction to seize and apprehend, let no man who follows after this unlawful traffic indulge in the dream that he may be able to escape the cruel death that is even now suspended over him! Let all tremble and obey! A special proclamation! Given at our courts the 18th year of Taoukwang, 10th moon, 30th day, (16th Dec. 1838). Canton Register.

Boats

Correspondence between the Hong merchants and the General Chamber of Commerce on the subject of the decked foreign boats on the river.

GENTLEMEN,

You recently addressed us with a request for the establishment of Passage Boats between Canton and Macao. We at once addressed the Government on the subject, in your behalf, and have now received, in reply, the commands of their Excellencies, the Governor and Superintendent of Customs. Copies of these we send herewith, requesting you, Gentlemen, to examine and act conformably to them, and then to write to us again that we may be enabled again to address the government. To make this request is our present object, and we take the occasion to offer our best wishes, &c.

(Signed by the Hong Merchants.)

To the Gentlemen of the G. C. of Commerce:
11th month, 11th day. (27th December.)

Tang, Governor, &c., &c., in Reply.

The Passage boats, I find, were first established with a view to the conveyance of letters, requisite in the commercial operations of the foreign merchants. But, not having been, of late, bound by any limitations, and the old regulation, that they should receive passes and undergo examination not having been complied with, they have obtained constant ingress into the river and to Canton, and illegal and fraudulent acts have been the abundant fruit. At length the boat Kelefat brought Opium Whampoa, and lines having written a letter and had some conveyed from thence, discovery and seizure ensued. Herein has originated the intention of putting an entire stoppage to the boats.

But now it appears that the Committee of foreign merchants of the General Chamber of all nations have presented a memorial, earnestly requesting the establishment of a number of decked boats, with official passports, to pass constantly to and fro, between Canton and Macao, for the conveyance of letters and of well conducted passengers.—such boats to be supplied each with a flag, having the words "Licensed Passage Boat," inscribed on it, in order to facilitate recognition of them,—and the conductors of the boats to have the surctiship of the said foreigners pledged for them, that, if in any case they should carry opium or smuggle, they shall be left to be broken up, and the passport shall be recovered and restored by the said foreigners.

(1) Whenever the shillings happen to be of an odd number, the sum carried to the farthings must of course always consist of 1*s*. or 48 farthings, rendering the transfer almost as easy both ways as if here was nothing carried.

* The office of a minister of the Hanglioo temple is to pass what another person says to the emperor's ear—very much like a chuen kung in the magistrate's courts.

Under such circumstances, the pledge of suretiship coming from the foreigners, and there being therefore a fixed responsibility, the thing assumes a practicable form. They are therefore permitted to make arrangements for a number of decked boats, for which official passes shall be given, that thus the necessities of their business may be supplied, and that becoming kindness may thereby be manifested.

In reference, however, to the request that the boats thus secured may have flags given to them with writing thereon, so that the forts, cruizers, and custom house stations, which they may pass, at the Bogue and elsewhere, may recognize them and refrain from causing detention, there is no consideration whatever here given to the question, whether they shall undergo any examination or not. If they be not required so to undergo examination, it will be indeed no easy matter to insure that private objects will not be pursued under the broad shield of the general interest. And may it not be, too, that, by the indulgence of crafty or of malicious purposes, parties may occasion the breaking up of any of the boats? In the first setting on foot of any matter, it is most important that everything should be plainly and securely marked out, that so the arrangement may be lasting, and may not be attended by evil results.

Wait, while I forward a communication to the superintendent of customs, that he may speedily give the matter his consideration; and, then after hearing from him in reply, ultimate measures shall be adopted and made public, in order that obedience may be paid thereto.

Let these commands at the same time be communicated to the said foreigners, that they may act in conformity to them.

Given—the 10th day of the 11th month, in the 18th year of Taoukwang.

Yu, Superintendent of Maritime Customs, &c. &c. in reply.

By this address it appears that the Committee of foreign merchants of the General Chamber of all nations earnestly request that a number of boats may be established for conveyance of letters between Canton and Macao, such boats to be provided with official passports, and the suretiship of the said foreigners to be pledged for them, that in case of their engaging in any contraband transactions, they are willing that they be broken up. Also, that each of the boats may have its number registered and a flag given to it with the words "Licensed Passage Boat" written thereon, as well as on the sails.

Those requests having come before me, I have given the matter due consideration, and find that decked, masted, and flag-bearing boats were interdicted, in consequence of a memorial laid before the throne, after the dissolution of the Company, by the then Governor Loo, and Superintendent of Customs, Pang. Hence for the conveyance of letters, it was only allowed to have small boats without mast or deck, and those having decks and masts should by law be driven forth.

Now, however, referring to the address above alluded to, I am induced indulgently to consider, that the foreigners, in coming from Macao to Canton, have to pass over an open sea, and that to avail themselves of winds, and protect themselves from rain, decks and masts are in some sense necessary. Their request may therefore be granted, so far as regards establishing a certain number of such boats, with passport. But their request being to establish "a number" of boats (or several boats), such "number" may be an excessive one. Let the Hong-merchants then adopt some moderate number—not more than five or six. As to the erection of flags, this would bring them somewhat within the letter of the prohibition of "flag-bearing" boats. It will be enough to inscribe the words on their sails, where they can easily be distinguished. When the number of boats has been determined on, I will attach my seal to the passport for each, and will also give a (second) pass, which must be presented for examination at the custom-house stations en route, the time of arrival at, and departure from, such stations to be filled in, and the boats if found free from anything contraband or smuggled, to be allowed at once to proceed. These passes, after being filled up, shall be exchanged for other ones. If any detention be given, or any extortion demanded, at any custom-house the said foreigners are authorized immediately to point it out, in an address to me, that punishment may instantly be inflicted. If any of the said foreigners, under pretence of the darkness of night, evade examination of his pass at the custom-house stations, so that the required insertion therein is not made, such person too must be punished for the offence of perverse transgression, and the Hong-merchants in forming arrangements are to give this their consideration. After they shall have made their arrangements, and the requisite number of boats shall have received passports, any other boats, which, not obeying the prohibitory regulations, shall venture to ply to and fro without permission, shall be fired upon by the cruizers and forts. As regards the boats registered as of the licensed number, the foreigners shall secure each boat as belonging to such and such a person. The small boats that ply between Canton and Whampoa may remain as of old. But the large licensed passage boats must not remain for any length of time in the neighbourhood of the foreign ships, lest the storing up of what is contraband should grow out thereof.

Wait, further till, having consulted with the Governors, the matter shall have received final consideration, when orders will be published for obedience.

Given—the 10th day of the 11th month in the 18th year of Taoukwang. (26th December, 1838.)

Canton Dec. 26th 1838.

To the Hong Merchants.

Gentlemen,

We now do ourselves the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 27th inst. enclosing copies of Edicts from their Excellencies the Governor and Hoppo relative to the establishment of licensed Passage Boats, and we have to request that you will express our thanks to these great officers for the promptness and liberal spirit with which they have taken our request into consideration.

His Excellency the Governor alluding to the guarantee which we are ready to give says "under "such circumstances, the pledge of suretiship com"ing from the foreigners, and there being therefore "a fixed responsibility, the thing assumes a practic"able form. They are therefore permitted to make "arrangements for a number of decked boats, for "which official passes shall be given, that thus the ne"cessities of their business may be supplied, and "that becoming kindness may thereby be mani"fested."

These are words of justice and benevolence, which we duly appreciate, and we trust that His Excellency will find that in transactions with foreigners from the west, the strongest security which can be exacted from them, is that of placing confidence in their honor.

It is a matter of much importance that the new system of licenced passage boats should be put into effect as soon as possible. We will therefore cause the several documents connected with the subject to be published in the papers for the information of all and we will, at the same time, issue a notice inviting the Proprietors of Boats, who may be desirous of submitting to our regulations, to tender them to our Chamber, that we may give to you the requisite guarantee. We shall point out to them in the strongest terms the penalty of forfeiture to which they will be liable should any person connected with the boats be proved to have employed her in smuggling transactions. On coming or quitting Canton it shall be incumbent on the master of the Boat to request the custom house officers to examine the baggage of the Passengers and other articles on board, that all may be passed in due form. On passing the Forts they will also receive instructions similar to those given to H. M Cutter that, whenever any Government cruizer approaches to examine the boat, the said master shall invite the officers so to do. Thus the two important points of preventing all illegalities and permitting the boats to pass up and down without delay, frequently, in commercial affairs, an object of the highest importance, may be combined together. What is said regarding the chinese characters being inscribed on the sails in preference to a flag shall be readily complied with. Requesting that you will submit our statement to the proper authorities,

we remain, Gentlemen
your most obedient Servants.

Canton Dec. 28th 1838.

Saturday, 29th Dec.

We publish, is this day's paper, an important correspondence that has taken place, as will be seen, between the General Chamber of Commerce, and the authorities, through the Hong merchants on the subject of the Passage boats. The conciliatory tone of the Governor and Hoppo, and the permission these officers grant to boats, guaranteed or secured by the Chamber of Commerce cannot, we are sure, fail to be received with pleasure by our community, the plying of these boats, though suffered, having never been permitted hitherto—on the contrary edicts have periodically been published against them. The Hoppo's edict is, on the whole, not so favorable as that of the Viceroy, since he requires the boats to be limited to five or six, and to be subject to be searched at the different custom-house stations. The former of these restrictions would limit the boats to a smaller number than would find employment, and the latter, if complied with, would cause much delay in their passages. These are, however, minor considerations, and will probably, after the boats shall once have been established, be allowed to be disregarded. Much we think has been gained by this concession of the authorites, and we hope soon to see the boats plying under the guarantee of the Chamber. It is, we believe, the intention of that body to advertise for tenders of boats to run according to these new Chinese regulations, and the security required by the Chamber in the deposition with it of a note of sale to the General Chamber of Commerce by the owner of the boat, thus enabling that body to destroy the vessel, without possibility of claim for her value, should she be found to infringe the revenue laws of China. We must say that we see nothing in this arrangement but what is perfectly fair and liberal on the part of the Chinese, as well as necessary for self protection of Chamber of Commerce, and wish soon to see it put in practice. A report has prevailed yesterday that in future boats with two masts only will be prohibited entering the river, and that those with one may freely come and go, and as a proof of the correctness of this report it has been stated that boats, schooner rigged, have been refused passage at the Bogue, which by lowering a mast were afterwards allowed to proceed. This, we believe, has actually occurred, but was probably owing to the stupidity of the inferior officer stationed at the Bogue. We find in the documents from the Governor and Hoppo nothing to justify such a supposition, the small boats alluded to by them being evidently the ships boats, cutters, gigs, long boats, etc. that ply between the shipping at Whampoa and Canton. It is therefore probable that in future all decked boats passing the Bogue on entering will be stopped, unless they have a license from the Chamber, countersigned by the Hoppo.

The smuggling boats meanwhile, we are told, have really left Whampoa, so that, if they do not return, there seems to be the chief obstacle against a resumption of the trade removed; but the Hong-merchants require from all house-holders in the factories a bond pledging themselves that they will not engage in smuggling on the river on this side of the Bogue, and, moreover, feeling deeply the degradation to which their whole body has been exposed, by one of them having lately been punished with wearing the wooden collar, under the mistaken notion of the Governor of a ship which that Hong merchant had secured, having been engaged in the smuggling of Opium, and from the others having been threatened with a similar treatment, the Co-hong are said to have come to the resolution of not re-opening the trade until a promise shall have been given to them by the authorities, that they in future shall not suffer any degrading punishment for the infraction of any Chinese law on board a ship at Whampoa secured by them, they being personally guiltless of such infraction. Whether they will succeed in this latter point appears to us very doubtful, the system of responsibility being a great favorite in Chinese internal regulations, and, we fancy, not easily relinquished. That the Hong-merchants should continue firm in their determination not to reopen the trade until they have received the necessary pledges of the non-recurrence of the smuggling on the river, we cannot wonder at, and we hope that they may succeed in putting an entire stop to it, since if continued or rather, resumed, it cannot fail to entail on the foreign community generally, disgrace, trouble, and danger, for the profit only of a few who perhaps have no stake whatever in the general trade, and may therefore continue their own pursuits regardless of any consequences to themselves. We refer our readers to the remarks of a Correspondent given elsewhere, in which a strong and distinct line is drawn between the smuggling of Opium outside and inside. It is the punishment to which the Whampoa Opium trade exposes innocent people, the danger which in consequence of popular tumults arising from this traffic, though indirectly, threatens our property and persons, and the chance of injuring a whole community and interests of immense amount for the very inadequate profit to a few, that lead us, more than any other considerations to wish fervently for its discontinuance—the outside trade has not yet had these results, and is, perhaps, destined never to have them. How far however the activity of the Chinese Government against the consumption of Opium, and their new penal laws in this respect, may even effect that, and as through it, it is impossible to foresee. At no time has the attention of Government been so much taken up by this vice of the Chinese, nor was there ever so certain a prospect as we think there is now of, for a period at least, a very considerable falling off in the consumption

Whilst on this topic, we have to inform our readers that we were in hopes of being able to lay before them something authentic as to the steps taken by Capt. Elliot, H. M's Chief Superintendent, but disappointed in this, nothing but what we consider well founded conjecture can be offered to them. This then is to the the following effect: Capt. Elliot, through the Hong-merchants, addressed the Chinese authorities, informing them that H. M. Government by no means approved of the smuggling in the river, and that H. M. subjects, in breaking, in this respect, any of the laws of the Celestial empire, were not entitled to the protection of British officers. We suppose that this address must also have contained a complaint against his intercourse through the Hong merchants, since it is now said that it has been settled that in future Capt. Elliot's communications to the Vice-roy direct will be received, and that that Officer is therefore to direct reply, not through the Hong-merchants. As far as we can learn, the etiquette of this new manner of communication is to be that Capt. Elliot, being in his own country an officer of fourth rank, is to address the Vice roy in the same style in which that officer is addressed by the Kwang chow-foo, whose rank is supposed to be about corresponding to that of H. M. Superintendent. We moreover learn that, owing to some informality, the first dispatch from the Vice roy was refused to be received by Capt. Elliot, until amended. Whether this difficulty has been removed we are not certain, but it is said that the hoisting of the English flag will give notice of the re-sumption of friendly intercourse between H. M. Superintendent and the Chinese authorities. The above, though we believe it to be correct in the main, we shall not at present accompany with any remarks of our own, feeling that arguments built upon unsafe data, cannot but be unsafe themselves; we see however many reasons why Capt. Elliot's interference may have dangerous consequences; on this we shall speak more at large here after.

In answer to the remarks of the Register of the 25th, regarding a passage in Capt. Elliot's speech, about his holding orders from his government against the river opium trade etc, we can only say that our report being drawn up from recollection of what we personally heard, we have little doubt of its correctness in the main, though the words used by us may not have been exactly those spoken by Capt. Elliot. We have heard from several, present at the meeting, that they thought our report in that respect perfectly correct; others have remarked that verbally it was not faithful, and that the Superintendent said not that he had the orders but the sentiments of his government upon the subject. The matter we reported was, it seems, correct, though we do not vouch for the very words; in fact our report did not profess to be verbatim.

The communication from "Opium Pipe" is inadmissible.

SHUTTING THE GATES AT THE BACK OF THE FOREIGN FACTORIES By accident we are unable to give a literal translation to our readers of the edict from the Hoppo, dated the 21st inst., commanding the Hong merchants to shut the gates leading to the foreign factories on the north side, but the following abstract from it we believe gives the substance of that edict correctly.

"Yu, Superintendent of customs, etc, to the Hong-merchants, for their information.

"It appears that in the 25th year of Kieulung, Le. Governor of Kwantung, sent a report to His Majesty, who granted to the foreign merchants trading at Canton to dwell in the 13 hongs which are the property of the Hong-merchants; it was not them, however, allowed that native traitors should go in and out and carry on clandestine intercourse. The Hong-merchants afterwards took the street to the north of the Factories, and a plan of the same was forwarded to the local Government; —this is on record. Now, however, I find that most of the foreign hongs have backdoors, which enable their inhabitants, as well as traitorous natives, to have intercourse together; this was first introduced after the fire in the 2d year of Taoukwang. (1822.) It has now become the custom for natives also to make use of these doors, and the people of my office consequently meet with increased difficulty in examining whether any prohibited goods are being smuggled, and this difficulty is increased by the severe Imperial orders lately received against the traffic in Opium. It is therefore necessary that more rigid measures be resorted to, and that the law such as it existed, as reported by the then Governor in the 25th year of Kieulung, be again enforced. Should this my order be opposed by the foreigners, they alledging that in case of fire, the backdoors are absolutely necessary for their own safety, you, the Hong-merchants, may answer that such calamities occur but very rarely, and that if boats not, therefore, to use precautions against them. Besides how is it, if such backdoors appear to them indispensable, that the Swedish, Imperial, American, Danish, Spanish, and French, have no outlet to the north?

"The Hong-merchants must see to the regulation of this matter without loss of time, and report progress to me."

On the 25th inst. the Parsee merchants petitioned the Viceroy to have the trade opened, and threw the blame of the present stoppage upon the Hong merchants, who, they said, used the pretence of there being boats in the river which smuggled Opium, to give over all mercantile transactions, and thus involved in serious loss people who were entirely innocent of anything of the kind.

The Viceroy's reply was not over courteous; he uses some insulting expressions towards them, and says that since opium has been already discovered in one ship at Whampoa (Capt. Kelefat's) it is by no means improbable, that there may be some in others. He rather applauds the conduct of the Hong merchants than otherwise, and commands them to desire the English Superintendent Elliot to drive all the boats out, which being done, the Hong merchants are then to examine which of the foreigners are good people, and allow their ships to open their holds, and on the other hand to report to him any ships that engage in illegal transactions.

From a Correspondent. Our Cotemporary's leading article of the 25th requires some special notice on our part, both on account of the many grave misstatements it contains, on matters of much moment, and as giving us a fair opportunity to place the question which is now at issue in a clear and intelligible form, more for the information of our distant readers, who are so deeply interested in the prosperity of this trade, than for those on the spot. It is a question of great importance, and it shall be our endeavor to discuss it in a fair and candid spirit, avoiding all personalities and topics likely to cause angry feelings.

We must commence by pointing out the wide distinction between the Opium-trade outside and inside the Bogue. This has not been quite fairly done by the Register who, throughout the discussion, has inveighed against Capt. Elliot's measures as directed against the welfare of the trade itself. The Opium-trade from 1821 to 1836 was exclusively conducted in ships anchored outside the river, and during the whole of that period, on no occasion has the legal trade of the country been compromised or endangered on its account. The Chinese, through whom its details were managed, knew and calculated upon the risks and penalties to which they subjected themselves and encountered them, with their eyes open. It was, in truth, an isolated trade of great magnitude, and of most extraordinary and anomalous nature, such as had never before been seen in any part of the world.

How widely different is the other case of the inside or river opium trade, whether on board ships of 1000 tons or schooners of 20, which bring the drug direct up to the city, and deposits it within the walls of our factories. By this trade every Chinese connected with us is placed in daily jeopardy of his life and fortune. Within the last month we have seen the entire body of the Hong merchants degraded to the dust, and an innocent member of their body punished as a felon. We have seen the innocent domestics of a British merchant seized and thrown into prison. The riot of 12th, which can directly be traced to these occurrences, is yet fresh in our recollection, and finally, the entire trade of our port has now been closed for a period of more than three weeks, and the Chinese Government assert, will not be reopened until the schooners, one and all, quit the river. Thus the most important trade in the world is stopped and imperilled because a few schooners, in which but a tithe of the mercantile community are interested, resolutely maintain the right to set the Chinese fiscal regulations at utter defiance. What will the shipowners, the manufacturers, the merchants of Great Britain and America say to these things!—Against this river smuggling, and not against the opium trade, are the measures of Capt. Elliot directed, and we firmly believe that a vast majority of the community wish they may be attended with full and perfect success. How could our cotemporary insert such a paragraph as the following: "The general trade continues stopped, owing to the hostility of Capt. Elliot to the presence of the passage boats in the river."

In considering this question fairly, it must not be overlooked, and we speak advisedly, when we repeat that a vast majority of merchants of Canton have throughout, from first to last, refrained from all connection whatever with the "river trade." We will not stop to discuss what may have been their motives for refusing to participate in a traffic which at one time was highly lucrative—but such are the facts, and is it to be expected that they are to continue much longer quietly and passively to see their own and the interests of their absent constituents seriously injured and endangered for the sake of a traffic with which they refuse any connexion?

We have no wish to set ourselves up as advocates of Capt. Elliot's measures; but still in common fairness and honesty we should make some allowances for the difficult situation in which he is placed, and protest against the application of such terms as "betraying the property and disgracing the character of British subjects, to this lying, corrupt and unjust government." We should have considered the next paragraph regarding Capt. Elliot taking command of a Chinese Government cruizer as intended for a joke, rather a bad one on such a subject, had it not been followed up by serious arguments, as to the penalties to which such conduct would subject the said Captain. Did our cotemporary really seriously believe in the truth of such trash? We can hardly credit it.

On one point we perfectly coincide, namely, that it is due to the public and to Capt. Elliot's own station that he should take some early opportunity clearly to state what is the nature of the new instructions he has received from home.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The suspension to landing and shipping off still continues, contrary to general expectation, but as the appearance in the river of the foreign Schooners has latterly been the cause assigned, as the y are, it is said, all leaving, matters may now be soon accommodated. Meanwhile there is little doing in any article of import, all of which are on the decline.

IMPORTS.

COTTON GOODS.—White or grey are not now enquired for. COTTON YARN more depressed than ever.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES are also less in demand, and for LONGELLS they only quote them at 8 @ 8¼-nominal-indeed there has been no transaction during the week in any of these articles.

COTTON.—In addition to several small sales of Bombay, 2600 bales ex Vanelltart, middling to fair and good were disposed of within these few days at, we believe, 8.7. There have also been sales of two to three lots of Tinnevelly in all about 1500 bales at 9.5. In Bengal nothing is reported, and in no description is there any disposition to speculate, at even low rates.

OPIUM.—There remains an entire cessation of all business in this article, and although we have not heard of any seizures lately, there is no indication that the authorities are relaxing in their severe measures, and the accounts from the East or West coast are almost as unfavorable. The deliveries at Lintin to the 22nd were, Patna old ; new ; Benares old , new ; Malwa ; Total Chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—No transactions in Nankin Silk yet, but the Chinese finding purchasers holding back, and, perhaps, alarmed at the suspension of the trade, begin to be a little less extravagant in their ideas.

EXCHANGE.—Private Bills on Calcutta are very plentiful—we hear of no buyers, and the rate for these bills is expected to advance considerably.

THE CANTON PRESS.

VOL. 4. No. 18. Canton, Saturday, 5th January, 1839. No. 174.

Official Notice to British Subjects.

Canton 31th December 1838.

The Provincial Government having consented to communicate direct with the Chief Superintendent on all important business under the seals of the Kwang Chow Foo and Kwang Hee, he has the honor to announce to Her Majesty's Subjects that the public intercourse is renewed. And as there appears to have been some misunderstanding with respect to the manner in which his own addresses reach the governor, he has to observe that it had already been formally conceded that His Seals should always be broken by His Excellency himself.

The paper marked No. 1 is the copy of that part of the chief superintendent's late correspondence with the governor relating to the traffic in opium conducted in small boats within the river: No. 2 is his excellency's reply to those observations.

Her majesty's subjects will perceive that the motives and reasons which had led the chief superintendent so urgently to enjoin the immediate cessation of this state of things, are identical with those which form the ground of his address to the governor.

After the most deliberate reconsideration of this course of traffic (which he heartily hopes has ceased for ever), the chief superintendent will once more declare his own opinion, that in its general effects, it was intensely mischievous to every branch of the trade, that it was rapidly staining the British character with deep disgrace, and finally, that it exposed the vast public and private interests involved in the peaceful maintenance of our regular commercial intercourse with this empire, to imminent jeopardy.

Thus profoundly impressed (and after the failure of his own public entreaties and injunctions), the chief superintendent feels that he would have betrayed his duty to his gracious sovereign and his country, if he had hesitated beyond the period he had formally fixed, effectually to separate her majesty's government from any direct or implied countenance of this dangerous irregularity. Looking steadily at its effects on British interests and British character, he had further resolved to shrink from no responsibility in drawing it to a conclusion, and he will as firmly use all lawful means in his power to prevent it's recurrence. It is a source of great support to him that the general body of the whole community settled at Canton, strongly concur with him in the deprecation of this peculiar mischief, and he has not failed to afford her majesty's government the satisfaction of knowing that such is the case

He takes this occasion to republish that part of the act of parliament, and the orders in council upon which his instructions are founded. And whilst he would respectfully observe that it is out of his power to publish his instructions, it is at the same time his duty to promulgate (as he has always done, and always will) whatever it may concern the interests of her majesty's subjects should be generally known.

In declaring, therefore, that her majesty's government will give no countenance whatever to proceedings of the kind which he has now been noticing, he requests it may be plainly understood that he is conveying the unequivocal sentiments of his instructions. Events over which he had no control, have cast, on this occasion, a difficult task on the chief superintendent, and devoting the most attentive consideration in his power to its suitable performance he can only aver that he has meant to do no more than his duty, but certainly no less.

In the execution of such an office as his own, however, when decisions must almost always be taken in moments of crisis, surrounded by embarrassing circumstances, the possibility that illegalities may be committed (with the sincerest intentions to avoid them) is not to be denied. It is only just, therefore to remind her majesty's subjects that the 9th clause of the act of parliament has provided the manner of pursuing their legal remedy. His official responsibility can always be fixed upon him by representation to the secretary of state for foreign affairs, to whom it is the chief superintendent's duty to transmit all complaints or appeals against himself.

By order of the chief superintendent of the trade of British subjects in China.

EDWARD ELMSLIE,
Sec. & Trea. to Supts.

No. 1.—Extract from an address to his excellency the governor of Canton by the chief superintendent, dated on the 23rd December, 1838.

The undersigned chief superintendent of the trade of British subjects in China, deliberating on those serious risks to which the lives and properties of many innocent men, both natives and foreigners, are presently exposed, considers that it is his duty to lay his thoughts before your excellency. Seeking for the immediate source of this dangerous state of things, he finds it in the existence of an extensive opium traffic conducted in small craft within the river.

From one condition of undisturbed lawlessness to another and still more hazardous, the course is sure and rapid. Illegalities will be committed more and more frequently, the difficulty of distinguishing between the right and the wrong will daily become more difficult, the foreign interests and character will suffer increasing injury, violent affrays will be of constant recurrence, life, and probably the lives of innocent men, will be sacrificed, some general catastrophe will ensue, and there will be employment, profit, and impunity, for none but the reckless and the culpable.

The government of the British nation will regard these evil practices with no feelings of leniency, but, on the contrary, with severity and continual anxiety: in proof of this, the undersigned has now to acquaint your excellency that he has already on the 18th day of this month formally required all boats (owned by British subjects) encaged in this traffic, to leave the river within three days.

He cannot faithfully declare that these injunctions have been fulfilled, and he has, therefore, now to request that your excellency will signify your pleasure through the honorable officers, the Kwang chow foo, and Kwanghee, so that all those concerned in these pursuits may know that he has received your excellency's authority for this notice.

The undersigned is without doubt, that the continuance of this traffic in the inner waters will involve the whole foreign community at Canton in some disastrous difficulty: and his gracious sovereign would not interpose for the protection of their property, on the behalf of those British subjects who continue to practise these dangerous disorders, after your excellency's public warning shall be authentically made known to them, through the officers of their own nation.

It is further to be desired that your excellency would command the honorable officers who may be employed on this occasion to proceed to the station of the boats with the undersigned. In order that the peaceful and the well disposed may not be involved in the same consequences as the perverse.

(Signed) CHARLES ELLIOT.

No. 2 To the English Superintendent Elliot.

Choo the prefect of Kwangchow Foo, and Hau, commander of the same department, jointly issue commands to the English Superintendent, Elliot.

On the 25th of December, 1838, we received from the governor of Kwangtung and Kwangse, Tang, the following official despatch.

"I received, on the 23d of December, 1838 the subjoined address from the English superintendent Elliot:

(see paper, No. 1.)

"Upon receipt hereof, the document being authenticated, I have given it due consideration.

"The said superintendent came, I find, to Canton, in obedience to commands received from his sovereign, to exercise control over the merchants and seamen, to repress the depraved, and to extirpate evils. Having such commands given to him, he must needs also have powers. It is very inexplicable, then, that these boats, having in violation of the laws entered the river, he should now find it difficult to send them out again, owing to his not having the confidence of all.

"But, seeing that he has now addressed me as above, and, that in his address he has plainly stated, that the government of the British nation will regard these evil practices with no feelings of leniency, but on the contrary with severity, and continual anxiety—seeing this, it is clear that he yet has a distinct understanding of his duty as a represser of the evil and protector of the good. Nor has he sought to excuse the difficulty he meets with by pleading inability. It is not then befitting in me to adhere obstinately in the letter of the law and so to isolate him from the object for which he has come hither.

"The request is therefore granted; and the prefect and commandant of Kwangchow shall be directed in the adoption of modified measures suited to the occasion, to give you sealed commands, so that you may have authority for proceeding in obedience thereto.

"The superintendent aforesaid must faithfully order away every one of the said boats, and must never permit them to return; should any dare perversely to disobey, or make sport of his commands, he is authorized instantly to represent the case, that proceedings may be thereon taken.

"I, the governor, having under my sway the whole land of Yue, and having on occasions to make most vigorous exercise of power, it may well be conceived that these boats trouble me not one iota.

"As soon as these boats shall have sailed, the merchant ships may at once have their trade reopened, as usual. There has been no intention to cause any protracted stoppage of it. And there is therefore no ground for anxiety upon that point."

* * * *

EXTRACT from an act of parliament passed in the 3rd and 4th year of the reign of his late majesty William IV. cap: 93.

V. And whereas it is expedient for the objects of trade and amicable intercourse with the dominions of the Emperor of China, that provision be made for the establishment of a British authority in the said dominions; be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, by any commission or commissions or warrant or warrants under His Royal Sign Manual, to appoint not exceeding 3 of His Majesty's subjects to be Superintendents of the trade of His Majesty's subjects, to and from the said dominions, for the propose of protecting and promoting such trade, and by any such commission or warrant as aforesaid to settle such gradation and subordination among the said Superintendents (one of whom shall be styled the Chief Superintendent,) and to appoint such officers to assist them in the execution of their duties, and to grant such salaries to such Superintendents and officers, as His Majesty shall from time to time deem expedient.

VI. And be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, by any such Orders, commission or commissions, as to His Majesty in Council shall appear expedient and salutary, to give to the said Superintendents, or any of them, powers and authorities over and in respect of the trade and commerce of His Majesty's subjects within any part of the said dominions; and to make and issue directions and regulations touching the said trade and commerce, and for the government of His Majesty's subjects within the said dominions; and to impose penalties, forfeiture or imprisonments for the breach of any such directions or regulations, to be enforced in such manner as in the said order or orders shall be specified; and to create a Court of Justice with criminal and admiralty jurisdiction for the trial of offences committed by His Majesty's subjects within the said dominions, and the ports and havens thereof, and on the high seas within 100 miles of the coast of China; and to appoint one of the Superintendents herein before mentioned to be the officer to hold such court, and other officers for executing the process thereof; and to grant such salaries to such officers as to His Majesty in Council shall appear reasonable.

VII. And be it enacted, that no Superintendent or Commissioner appointed under the authority of this Act shall accept for or in discharge of his duties any gift, donition, gratuity or reward, other than the salary which may be granted to him as aforesaid, or be engaged in any trade or traffic for his own benefit or for the benefit of any other person or persons.

VIII. And be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council by any Order or Orders to be issued from time to time, to impose, and to empower such persons as His Majesty in Council shall think fit, to collect and levy from or on account of any ship or vessel belonging to any of the subjects of His Majesty entering any port or place where the said Superintendents or any of them shall be stationed, such duty on tonnage and goods as shall from time to time be specified in such order or orders not exceeding in respect of tonnage the sum of 5s. for every ton, and not exceeding in respect of goods the sum of 10s. for every 100l of the value of the same; the fund arising from the collection of which duties shall be appropriated, in such manner as His Majesty in Council shall direct, towards defraying the expences of the establishments by this Act authorized within the said Dominions: provided always, that every Order in Council issued by authority of this Act shall be published in the London Gazette; and that every such Order in Council, and the amount of expence incurred, and of duties raised under this Act, shall be annually laid before both Houses of Parliament.

IX. And be it enacted, that if any suit or action shall be brought against any person or persons for any thing done in pursuance of this Act, then and in every such case such action or suit shall be commenced or prosecuted within six months after the fact committed, and not afterwards, except where the cause of action shall have arisen in any place not within the jurisdiction of any of His Majesty's Courts having civil jurisdiction, and then within 6 months after the plaintiff or plaintiffs, and defendant or defendants shall have been within the jurisdiction of any such Court; and the same and every such action or suit shall be brought in the county or place where the cause of action shall have arisen, and not elsewhere, except where the cause of action shall have arisen in any place not within the jurisdiction of any of His Majesty's Courts having civil jurisdiction; and the defendant or defendants shall be entitled to the like notice, and shall have the like privilege of tending amends to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or their agent or attorney, as is provided in actions brought against any Justice of the Peace for acts done in the execution of his office, by an Act passed in the 24th year of the reign of King George the Second (cap. 44) intituled, "an Act for the rendering Justices of the Peace more safe in the execution of their office, and for indemnifying constables and others acting on obedience to their warrants;" and the defendant or defendants in eve y such action or suit may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if the matter or thing complained of shall appear to have been done under the authority and in execution of this Act, or if any such action or suit shall be brought after the time limited for bringing the same, or be brought and laid in any other county or place than the same ought to have been brought or laid in as aforesaid, then the Jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any action after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if a verdict shall pass against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or if upon demurrer judgment shall be taken against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall and may recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for recovery thereof as any defendant or defendants hath or have in any cases of law.

C. C. GREVILLE.

At the Court at Brighton, the 9th day of Dec. 1833.
PRESENT,
The King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Whereas by a certain act of parliament, made and passed in the third and fourth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled "An act to regulate the trade to China and India," it is, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for his majesty, by any such order or orders as to his majesty in council shall appear expedient and salutary, to create a court of justice, with criminal and admiralty jurisdiction, for the trial of offences committed by his Majesty's subjects within the dominions of the Emperor of China, and the ports and havens hereof, and on the high seas within one hundred miles of the coast of China, and to appoint one of the superintendents in the said act mentioned to be the officer to hold such court, and other officers for executing the process thereof; now, therefore, in pursuance of the said act, and in execution of the powers thereby in his majesty in council in that behalf vested it is hereby ordered by his majesty, by and with the advice of his privy council, that there shall be a court of justice, with criminal and admiralty jurisdiction, for the purposes aforesaid, which court shall be holden at Canton, in the said dominions, or on board any British ship or vessel in the port or harbour of Canton, and that the said court shall be holden by the chief superintendent for the time being, appointed, or to be appointed, by his majesty under and in pursuance of the said act of parliament.

And it is further ordered, that the practice and proceedings of the said court upon the trial of all issue of fact or law to be joined upon any indictments or information to be therein brought or prosecuted shall be conformable to and correspond with the practice and proceedings of the courts of Oyer and Terminer and Goal delivery in England, upon the trial of such issues in such courts, so far as it may be praticable to maintain such conformity and correspondence, regard being had to the difference of local circumstances; and especially it is hereby ordered, that every such trial of any such issue of fact, or of mixed fact and law, shall be by the said chief superintendent for the time being and a jury of twelve men, and that upon every such trial the examination of witnesses for and against the party or parties charged shall take place viva voce in open court; and that the sentence or judgment of the said court upon every such trial, founded upon the verdict of such jury, shall be pronounced in open court by such chief superintendent as the presiding judge thereof.

And whereas it will be necessary to frame and prescribe rules of practice and proceeding to be observed upon all such prosecutions, in order to ascertain how far the same can be brought into conformity with the practice and proceeding of his majesty's courts of Oyer and Terminer and goal delivery in England, and how far it may be necessary to deviate from such practice and proceeding by reason of the differences of local circumstances, it is, therefore, further ordered, that such chief superintendent for the time being shall be, and he is hereby authorised from time to time, but subject to the provisions aforesaid, to promulgate all such rules of practice and proceeding as it may be necessary to adopt and follow, upon, or previously to, the commitment of any person to take his trial in the said court; and respecting the taking of bail for the appearance of any such person at such trial, and respecting the form and manner of preferring and finding indictments, and of exhibiting criminal information against any persons charged with any crimes or offences before the said court; and respecting the manner of summoning and convening juries for the trial of such indictments or informations; and respecting qualifications of such jurors and the mode of summoning and compelling the attendance of witnesses; and respecting the process of the said court, and the mode of carrying thesame into execution; and respecting the times and places of holding such court, and the duties of the respective ministerial officers attending the same, whom he is hereby authorised to appoint provisionally subject to his majesty's approbation; and also respecting every other matter and thing connected with the administration of justice therein which it may be found necessary to regulate.

And it is further ordered, that all rules so to be promulgated as aforesaid shall be binding and take effect from the respective days of the dates thereof, but that the same shall, by such chief superintendent, be transmitted to one of his majesty's principal Secretaries of state, for his majesty's approbation or disallowance, and that any such rule shall cease to be binding or to have any force or effect from and after the time of which his majesty's disallowance thereof shall be made known to such chief superintendent for the time being.

And it is further ordered, that a record shall be duly made and preserved of all the proceedings, judgments and sentences of the said court, which record shall be retained in the custody of an officer of the said court to be by the chief superintendent specially charged with the performance of that duty.

And the right honorable Viscount Palmerston, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of state, is to give the necessary directions hervin accordingly.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Sir,

It has been truly remarked by the greatest of poets that, [players,

"All the world's a stage, the men and women merely
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time, plays many parts."

You, Mr. Editor, will be at no loss to reconcile this quotation with the events that are now passing before our eyes, nor can you fail to apply it to that man, who is now figuring on our limited political arena as prime buffo, and playing such fantastic tricks, that while the Chinese author ties and the unconcerned part of this community weep for merriment, those of us who have the misfortune to have drawn our first breath in the British Islands, hang down our heads like so many bulrushes and blush for very shame!

I have proposed to myself, Mr. Editor, the very painful and disagreeable task of taking a retrospective view of Capt Elliot's political carreer, since he first became known to the Canton community. It is to me I say a peculiarly unpleasant task, believing him as I do to be in his private capacity, a very good and amiable member of society, and a man whom I should have liked to bid God speed to, had he only known his own true interets; viz: to keep quiet, and to hold his tongue. His public character however belongs to the community at large, and conceiving him as I do to have disgraced his country in that capacity more than any public servant that ever lived, you will not be astonished if in the review of his conduct I have proposed, I treat him with all the severity that a man jealous of the honor of his country and indignant at seeing it betrayed by the very man whose duty it was to have upheld it, can commit to paper:—

I will speak daggers to him, but use none!

Capt. Elliot then came out with Lord Napier's mission, as master attendant. His duty in that capacity would have been to have levied a certain tax on the shipping, and cargo shipped for England:— but the idea of such a tax being levied here having been abandoned, Capt. Elliot's situation of consequence became a sinecure.

By the untimely death of Lord Napier Capt. Elliot was advanced to the post of secretary, and when in that capacity he issued a most singularly luminous and intelligent document, dated Macao 10th November 1834. The said document is too long for insertion, but perhaps my readers will do me the favor to refer to the Canton Register for 1834, No. 46, and compare the sentiments of Capt. Elliot then, with the sentiments of Capt. Elliot now If thou' art he!—but oh! how fallen! how changed!

Mr. Davis left this for England early in 1835, when Capt. Elliot was promoted to be 3rd superintendent. He had not been long in that situation, when a circumstance occurred which gave employment to his restive and fidgetty turn of mind, for which no man was ever more remarkable. The Argyle's boat and crew having been detained by the Chinese, Capt. Elliot went to the City gate, accompanied by Mr Gutzlaff, to demand communication with the Chinese government on the subject by letter, (mark well my words, by letter) when they were literally kicked out! See the Canton Register for 1835, No. 5 and No. 7. Shortly after this, by the resignation of Mr. Astell, Capt. Elliot was promoted to the post of 2nd. Superintendent, and again by the recall of Sir Geo. B. Robinson about the end of 1836 he was left at the head of the exceedingly expensive and useless establishment, in which he had it first played so humble a part.

Being now without a rival, it could hardly be expected that he should remain long in peace and quietness. Accordingly we find Capt. Elliot in the month of January 1837 (see the Canton Register Vol. 10 No. 4) endeavoring to get into correspondence with the British community here, by means of a Committee, selected from the most influential merchants. This was actually done, but because Capt. Elliot denied the right of any merchant or merchants to call a public meeting, insisting on keeping the reins in his own hands, for the purpose of being able to dragoon us more easily, the said intended correspondence (I feel happy to say) fell to the ground. (See Nos 5 and 6 of the Register for the same year.) (By the way it is worthy of remark, that in the correspondence purposed to be carried on between the superintendents and the community, some hints were thrown out, that the said correspondence might frequently have occasion to be of a secret nature. Nearly two years have passed, and I would like to know, what the deuce he had secret to communicate? The love of the secret and mysterious seems another very prominent feature of the Superintendent's public character! He likes to make a mighty fuss about—nothing.)

By referring to Nos. 5 and 12 of the said Register, the reader will perceive that Capt. Elliot PETITIONED the Viceroy thro' the Hong merchants for permission to come up and reside at Canton; that the Viceroy, having first sent officers to make enquiries respecting Capt. Elliot, seemed satisfied with the result of these enquiries, and therefore made a favorable report to the Emperor, who permitted Capt. Elliot to come and reside at Canton (now mark well the terms!) so long as he obeyed the laws, but if he opposed the laws he was to be DRIVEN OUT!! Upon these most courteous and flattering terms, Capt. Elliot came to Canton and hoisted the English flag on the 19th April 1837, when (see the Canton Register, for the same year No. 17) he was welcomed and feted by some of the first merchants of the place.

Many opinions existed as to the propriety of Capt. Elliot's conduct on that occasion. The Editor of the Canton Register justified him on the ground of orders received. You condemn! the measure as impolitic, being likely to bring upon himself and government many disagreeable questions and such like, in consequence of the O. ium trade not being a legalized trade. I, in my own mind, felt averse to it on many grounds. First I looked upon it as a base abandonment of the principle for which the lamented Napier had struggled and died 2ndly. It is without doubt put on the Chinese records that "in "the 14th year of Taoukwang the English tried "through Lord Napier to bully us into correspon- "dence by LETTER. In the 17th year of Tao- "kwang, the English, through their Superintendent "Elliot, came and humbly knocked head, prostrating "through the Hong merchants for leave to establish "and open a communication by PETITION! Con- "sequently it follows, that the English are a nation "of bullies, that we only require to treat them as "we do all other bullies: be firm with them and they "will quake and give in! and that, where their King "can give such different orders to his officers, his "councils cannot be influenced by reason, or con- "ducted with common sense!" 3rdly, I objected to Capt. Elliot coming up to Canton at that time, for the same reason that you did-viz, that the Chinese Government would infallibly tax him with the Opium trade and desire him to put a stop to it, a dilemma from which I could not see how he could free himself by any excuse or equivocation: and lastly I objected to the measure because he had treated the community of which I have the honor to be a member with sovereign contempt: regarding the manner of his coming up, and regarding that act itself, and regarding his reasons for taking that step, he never condescended to communicate a syllable to the body of free Citizens over which he came to pre- side! But, says the Canton Register, "he did itin obedience to his orders no doubt!" Very well, reply I, let us take him upon that tack, and I now in the voice of the community at large, call upon Capt. Elliot to produce his ORDERS for the rash and uncalled for step that he took in the beginning of 1837!!

The superintendent Elliot then had not been long seated in his chair of office, when the very circumstance you had foreseen and so ably warned him of before hand, actually occurred. The Chinese Government very naturally said to him, "if "you have, as you pretend you have, authority over "the merchants and seamen of your country, and are "come here on purpose to control them, do you "then control them now! DRIVE AWAY THE "LINTIN SHIPS! STOP THE OPIUM "TRADE!!" Capt. Elliot attempted to finesse and evade, but it was no go, he had to do with an enemy who had fibbed him into a corner and was disposed to show him no mercy. The Viceroy simply reduced it to this, "do you either drive out "these Opium ships, or I WILL DRIVE OUT "YOU!!" It was just at that happy moment, that the superintendent received fresh orders from home "commanding him to hold no communication "with the Chinese Government, except direct, and by LETTER!!" Elliot knowingly took advantage of this lucky juncture, and pressed the Viceroy to communinate by letter. The consequence of his letter he well knew before hand. Lord Napier had died before his eyes for trying to communicate by letter, he himself and Dr. Gutzlaff had been kicked out of the city for trying to open communication by letter, and now he well knew what the consequences of the third application would be: a contemptuous refusal! Having got such contemptuous refusal, he had a fair excuse for quitting Canton, without being actually driven out of it by the Viceroy. Now, gentle readers, a suspicion did then exist in my mind, that these ORDERS were all bam, and that the whole was a mere ruse de guerre to hoodwink the public and find a decent excuse for retreating from the city. My suspicion has since almost been turned into certainty, for the following reasons: 1st. He never made public those orders. 2nd. We have accounts from England of debates on matters connected with China till the end of July. Accounts from China were then received till the month of March 1838. Capt. Elliot pleaded these imperative orders in the month of November 1837, and yet we observe by last accounts, that so far from his master Lord Palmerston speaking of Capt. Elliot as a man whom he had ordered to drop communication with the Chinese authorities and haul down his flag, he quotes him as being by last accounts an excellent terms with the said local authorities! And thirdly, I think the whole to have been a ruse from the tenor of his late disgraceful correspondence with the Viceroy. This is not yet made public, but it soon will, and perhaps in the meantime the public will be good enough to take my word for the fact. But, exclaim some, Capt. Elliot is a man of the nicest honor! and you do not mean to insinuate that he is capable of—of—indeed of stating anything that is not literally and truly the case? I reply that I believe Capt. Elliot to be in private life a very good sort of a man, and his word would go a long way with me, still, it would be infinitely more satisfactory to me, and I believe to the public at large, could we only see those ORDERS that he speaks of, and again I call upon Capt. Elliot in the name of the community to produce those ORDERS under which he found himself compelled to haul down his flag on the 1st Decamber 1837, (see Canton Register vol. 10 No. 49.). Be the truth as it may, assuming it merely for argument's sake that Capt. Elliot did humbag the public on that occasion, he certainly played his part well. He carried with him the esteem and sympathy of the British residents at Canton, (which from his amiable manners in society he had a just title to do); a party of young English gentlemen volunteered to row him to Whampoa, and every one accompanied him to the landing place, as the British Jack was hauled down, and (to use the graphic language of the Editor of the Register) then closed act the second! (The reader will please remember that act first was closed by the melancholy death of Lord Napier.)

Before the third act (now performing) opened, (an act which tinges with scarlet the face of every honest Englishman in Canton) one or two pretty little, interludes occurred, just us it were pour pa- ser le temps. One of these was anent the Whampoa Hospital ship. In vain did Capt. Elliot struggle to obtain direct correspondence with the government upon this occasion. The Viceroy spurned him, nay almost spit upon him, which our readers, who admire the doctrines of the new testament will be pleased to learn, has been returned by Capt. Elliot with the most unmanful, mean, and servile language. Finally Capt. Elliot was beat again and compelled to give in. (We have a very curious little document connected with this affair, which has not yet met the public eye, we hope however soon to be able to serve it up.)* Another little interlude took place when Admiral Maitland was here a few months ago. The Bombay schooner (a notorious smuggling craft) having been fired upon by the Bogue forts, Capt. Elliot unexpectedly made his appearance in Canton and once more sought communication by LETTER! His frame of mind was not however quite so christian as when he repaid the Viceroy's railing with blessings, for we find that his object was (strange inconsistency of the most inconsistent of men!) to obtain redress for the insult done the British flag by firing at the BOMBAY OPIUM SMUGGLER! which said Bombay and her smuggling consorts, he is now (only the difference of a very few months, mark!) aiding the Chinese Government to drive out vi et armis if necessary! or, in other words, to do the very thing himself, which 3 or 4 months ago he was ready to fight the Chinese government for doing!!! 'Tis strange! tis passing strange! and not more strange than true! His messengers having been repulsed with contempt, and Admiral Maitland being luckily blessed with a little more common sense than the superintendent, this short interlude vanished as rapidly as the smile of pity and contempt that it gave rise to!

And now, Mr. Editor, I perceive that as we are about to open the third act, I have already encroached a great deal-perhaps too much upon your time, your patience and your columns, and I find that I have a great deal yet to say, which had better be left to another opportunity; perhaps, ere I again address you, some most important documents may have appeared before the public; suffice it in the meantime to state, that Capt. Elliot has again PETITIONED the Viceroy, and begged for permission to PETITION him in future: that the Viceroy has given Capt. Elliot a very gracious reply, in which he tells Capt. Elliot that his prince; viz., the sovereign of England has been hitherto RESPECTFULLY OBEDIENT! and advises Elliot to take his sovereign in that respect as a model; that while the cheek of every Englishman burns at the insult, the superintendent alone—glories in his shame! that whileevery Englishman in his heart execrates his foolish, this wanton, his illegal measures,—by his command is the British Jack again hoisted, and on Sunday last the flag that "for a thousand years has braved the battle and the breeze," disenvolved it's unwilling folds, and showed to the anxious spectators that emblem of British authority blazoned in a field of DISGRACE and quartered with the crest of DISHONOUR!! Your's.

BRITANNICUS.

Canton, 1st January, 1839.

TANG. Vice-roy of the Two Quang provinces &c. &c.. sends this reply to the Hong-merchants. *

Whereas in Quang-tung it has hitherto been permitted to merchants of all nations to have intercourse (for commercial purposes) if any unexpected event has occurred, no matter whether it concern foreign merchants or foreign Superintendents, every thing has been respectfully conducted by orders transmitted thro' the Hong-merchants, there has never been any direct communication with mandarins, nor has any other kind of man or police runner been allowed to interfere in the business! These regulations are bright and clear, as the laws of our Celestial dynasty are exceedingly right and proper!

* As a pendent to Britannicu's letter we subjoin the document here referred to, which has been some time in our possession. ED. C. P.

* Note. The foregoing is a hurried translation which, being written off at the moment, may not be without some little mistakes, though perfectly correct in the main. The document was never intended for publication, and now when being sent to the press, the translator has it not in his power to compare it again with the original.

Now, in reference to this business of the Danish foreign Ship Baker, it is really no trading cargo ship, but bolted into Whampoa of her own accord, and there anchored. There would have been no difficulty in driving her out immediately, but I, the Vice-roy, looking up to the ever flowing goodness of the Great Emperor towards the men from afar, and taking that as my model, kindly desired her to go away, and further because the said Superintendent Elliot, has formerly shown by his petitions, that he knew something about business, therefore I commanded the said Hong-merchants that they should desire him to manage this piece of business within the limited time. The said security Merchants ought really to have obeyed and acted with respect, and how comes it then, that this said Superintendent borrows the pen of his attache Morrison to transmit to us such a piece of mad barking? If the Superintendent, for the sake of an old ship, wants to cramp me (or frighten me) with his documents, (I beg to tell him) that he is like the grasshopper who stretches out his arms and thinks them a pair of axes! How can he have any idea of his own dimensions! he is not worth the trouble of a reprof. (N B This is like telling Capt. Elliot he is the frog in the fable trying to put himself on a level with the ox.) You the said Hong-merchants having gladly received Morrison's letter, and not having tossed it back at him have made a very great, and gross blunder! ye mighty mandarin merchants! you have still further stained your name and reputation by putting your names to such a document requesting my instructions! this calls forth my most thorough indignation! I ought to degrade one and all of you, but only being just now prompted by motives of compassion, I extend my mercy to you! Do ye immediately and with deep respect take up the previous edict, and make it clearly and minutely known to the said Superintendent Elliot that he may come and speedily arrange matters. If he do not, I, the Vice-roy hold the staff of office in my grasp, and wont make much difficulty in dealing with a single ship of the outside foreigners. Whether he consent or whether he oppose, you, the said Hong-merchants, must within ten days let me have a reply in a luminous petition (to the effect) that the ship has gone away that I may act accordingly.

As for the said Superintendent Elliott since he boasts about being a foreign mandarin, (let me tell him) that our maudarins of the Heavenly dynasty are complete, and our laws are very severe. If natives or foreigners commit crimes, we have special laws to punish them. A foreign mandarin is an exceedingly useless personage, and as to going or staying he may just suit his own convenience. If he remain and (don't keep quiet I'll soon find means to send him off! Verily, the sacred soil of our Celestial Empire shall never become a receptacle for such nastiness! Let this edict be distinctly known! do not oppose!

We have to advise you that the exportation of Rice from this Island is prohibited since the 5th inst. This is owing to the appearance of a short crop throughout the island, and the certainty of almost a total failure in the immediate vicinity of Manila. The price of the common Cargo Rice is three dollars per Cahan, and paddy $\frac{3}{4}$. 1 @ 1$\frac{1}{4}$ per Cahan. We do not anticipate any thing like a scarcity of grain in the islands for their actual consumption, as our stock of the last two years is great; but the Paddy is in the hands of rich natives who have caused this extraordinary rise in the price. Several Pontins and larger vessels will proceed at once to Cavis and Antique for the purpose of bringing the grain which is in store to the Capital, so that it is not likely that the high prices will continue, but we think it will be sometime ere the prohibition of export will be raised.

PLAN FOR THE VERY SAFE CONDUCT OF THE TRADE WITH CANTON &c. &c.

Dear Mr. Editor,

The proclamation of the Governor and Lieut.-Governor, translation of which appeared in your last, informs us, that reports of all the high provincial officers on the means of checking the import of Opium, have been laid before the Emperor, and that they differ only in recommending measures each more severe than the other. We may therefore set it down as the settled policy of the Government, at least so long as Taouqwang is at its head, that foreign Opium shall be excluded.

On the other hand, we have a large Indian population headed by their rulers, a wide circle of enterprising capitalists, and a fleet of Clippers, station-ships, and small craft ready (and I fear determined) to force the import. I do not doubt myself, that public opinion (in Europe and America) will ere long make itself the arbiter between these conflicting resolves, nor that its voice will one day justify the Chinese side, by proclaiming the Opium-trade — the most lamentable, hurtful, odious, ever known since the earliest era of Commerce. But meantime, while this public sentiment is forming, we want a plan for securing the legal trade against losses and hazards such as it is now suffering. Such a plan would indeed come more properly from the parties engaged in the sale of the drug, (as they must naturally feel accountable to their constituents generally, for the losses the Opium is now working) still I feel bound in Charity not to withhold suggestions, tending to the solution of the important problem how to fulfil obligations, without emptying purses. And, by the way, I will throw them into a mathematical form, that they may be the more convincing.

Axiom.—It is absolutely necessary to the safety of the legal trade with this port, that the representatives of the general interests be entirely separated from the Opium interest. (Ex.-Opium and tea are immiscible).

Post. 1st. Let it be granted—that, until the progress of investigation and conviction shall bring the foreign residents to as advanced a point of information and

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The interruption to the trade was withdrawn on the 1st inst., so far as concerns shipping off, and the discharging of vessels which had already commenced. The Hong-merchants refuse however to secure any other vessels, pending their discussion with authorities as to their liabilities (and there are nearly 20 vessels with full cargoes) and as the Tea and Silk-men will not come to terms the trade may still be considered virtually suspended, and it will require all the watchfulness and exertions of foreigners to frustrate the attempts wich the Hong-merchants, no doubt, are now making to fetter the commerce with further restrictions.

IMPORTS.

In Cotton Goods and Woollens, we have not heard of a single transaction; the former are quoted nominally the same, but without demand. Spanish Stripes, have rather declined, as also Longells, except scarlets.

Rice.—Without any alteration in its depressed state. The Manila Government have prohibited the exportation from the apprehension of a failure in the crop, but this will be attended merely with inconvenience to vessels touching there for cargoes, to save the Canton Port charges, without any effect on this market.

Cotton.—About 2000 bales of Bengal cotton ex Eliza of middling to fair quality were sold in the early part of the week at 10.1, and a small lot of inferior Cutchoura at 8.5, and one or two small parcels of Bombay at 8 3 @ 8.7, but the market generally continues dull

Opium.—There is absolutely nothing doing, and we therefore withdraw our quotations. There have been no further edicts during the week, from which to gather the intentions of the authorities. Deliveries to the 22nd were, Patna old 6, new 29; Benares new 47; Malwa 192; Total 274 chests.

EXPORTS.

Raw Silk.—One or more small parcels have arrived, and we think there is an inclination in the holders to listen to more favorable terms.

Tea.—The partial opening of the trade has had no effect upon the Tea market, it continues quite inactive.

Canton, 5th January, 1839.

moral discrimination, (as to the evils of opium,) as the Chinese Government and people now occupy, the separation can be effected most easily by dividing the community locally into two parts—an opium agency and a general agency.

Post. 2nd. Let it be granted—that the general agency remain where it lawfully is, and that the opium agency withdraw to Hong Kong, or (if a floating residence be disliked, and it be well to keep up the present broad distinction between master and man in the drug service,) to Macao, where the trade can be carried on under the Portuguese name, fame, and protection.

Then. 1st, As the whole trade would afford the same dividend, to be divided among the same dividees (every whole is equal to all its parts and vice versa) no loss would result from the plan contemplated.

Memor. It is not for a moment supposable that pecuniary objections could weigh against considerations of honor or duty, yet it tends to satisfaction, to bring our mathematics to the support of our consciences.

2nd. A quiet separation being thus made by mutual consent, (personal choice being determined by ira, or superior affection for the drug, fondness for ladies's society, or conscientious scruples &c. &c.) the residents remaining at Canton, should proceed to avow their honest convictions.

3rd. To make these avowals effectual, a joint memorial should be prepared and sent to the Governor, making known to his Excellency, that the foreign community having undergone a spontaneous ferunentation, had at length become perfectly cleansed from the "black commodity." and that henceforth, his Excellency must seek for the offensive "scum" referred to in sundry Edicts, somewhere on the "outside waters".

4th. A second "Edittio Expurgata" of the same should be published for transmission to constituents in Europe and America, (Turkey always excepted) with suitable comments, adopted to suit their minds (in the midst of Christmas festivities) as to any apprehensions of an agrarian division of property taking, or having taken, place near the factories, between the 3rd and 12th December.

These considerations, will, I trust, evince the feasibility and propriety of the plan. Q. E. D. &c. &c.

Not being prepared with a proper peroration, Mr. Editor, I adopt one (no plagiary I hope) from the Oratio prima in Catalinam.

"Quare, P. C., * secedant improbi, secernant se a bonis, unum in locum congregentur; muro † denique, id quod sæpe jam dixi, secernantur a nobis: desinant insidiari domi suæ consuli, circumstare tribunal Prætoris urbani, malleolos comparare &c. &c." All which I thus translate for the benefit of the unclassical reader "therefore, Mr. Editor, let the Opiumsmen secede, let them separate themselves from the legal traders, let them congregate together: let us have the barrier between us ‡ (as I have said before) let them cease to worry their own superintendent, let them be done scolding the Governor, let them hush about hunting-whips and rattan shields and life preservers. &c. &c.

For the rest of this prophetic exhortation, I must refer to Cicero.

Forgive me, Mr. Editor, if I am uncharitable (to others or to you) in quality or quantity. If so, I plead, as the "Oratio secunda" has it, "non est ista mea culpa, sed temporum."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

Permit me to ask thorugh the medium of your columns, whether it is not in the power of the Superintendents to compel the Capt. of a British Ship to take letters. It must be fresh in your recollection that about a month since, a British ship literally sneaked away and the Captain refused to take letters: and as the proceeding might be repeated, the question thus publicly asked may perhaps attract the attention of the Superintendents.

The point is not without importance, now that the foreign Trade is liable to be suspended at any moment.

Canton, 3rd January, 1839. A. B.

Saturday, 5th Jany.

We intended to have reviewed in this number the occurrences of the year now past, but Capt. Elliot's documents, as well as a rather long correspondence, force us to confine ourselves at present to the more pressing occurrences of the first week of this present year. The events in December caused many gloomy forebodings as to the future, but we cordially wish that they will soon be dispelled and that to our friends and readers the year just begun may be one of happiness and prosperity. In so far it has begun well as on the first day of the year the shipping, which had been suspended during three weeks, was resumed, partially at least, all such ships as had been secured by Hong-merchants previous to the seizures of Opium in Canton, being permitted to load and unload; but the Hong-merchants still refuse to secure the newly arrived. The Opium boats have all left the river, and such of the Passage boats as arrive, are only permitted to pass the Bogue with a pass from the officers there. Meanwhile we understand that many of the proprietors of these boats have tendered them to the Chamber of Commerce, to run under a licenee from that body, on condition of the boats being destroyed should they be detected in any smuggling transactions, and, to enable the Chamber to do so without incurring pecuniary responsibility, a deed of sale is to be deposited with the Chamber Tenders for boats of not less than 25 tons only will be received. We may therefore hope that the river-trade will cease, if only the Chinese authorities will be watchful at the Bogue.

We perceive that our cotemporary of the Register is pleased to assume as written by us, a few remarks we published last week, headed, from a correspondent. The heading these remarks in this manner was meant to show that they were not written by us, and that we did not pledge ourselves to the opinions therein expressed. We published them as we do other communications made to us either in shape of a letter or otherwise, and which though we may dissent from them, we deem it but fair to admit in our columns as shewing the objects under discussion under different aspects and also as affording other members of the community the means of making known their opinions. We endeavor, personally to obtain upon all public questions the best information, and then offer our candid and sincere comment on them, and, though we may have a secret preference for our own lucubrations, we are by no means so wedded to our own opinions, as not to think other people's worth consideration. This latter, we are sorry, is not the case with many of the opinions put forward, within the two last numbers particularly, of the Register. It is altogether an untenable position of that paper that "the general trade continues stopped owing to the hostility of Capt. Elliot to the presence of the passage boats in the river," and that "the riot on the 12th is not more intimately connected with the inside than with the outside opium trade." Several days before Capt. Elliot came to Canton, in the evening of the 12th December on which the riot occurred, the trade had been stopped by the Hong merchants in consequence of opium smuggling having been detected. (vide Canton Press, 8th December) and the Hong merchants declared that it should not be reopened until all the boats were gone. We are therefore at a loss to know what on earth Capt. Elliot had do to with the stoppage of the trade, or in what manner his hostility to the boats prolonged that stoppage. That the riot on the 12th was caused by the smuggling in the foreign factories having been detected, no one can deny, for the Viceroy, in his answer to the Chamber of Commerce expressly says "that the penalty of death to which Mo Lankin had subjected himself, was the result of the pernicious introduction of opium into Canton by depraved foreigners. I commanded therefore, that the criminal should be led out to the ground of the thirteen factories adjoining the foreign residences, and should there be executed." This execution, which was to take place in front of our houses, because opium had been smuggled into Canton, was resisted, and the riot, as every body knows, followed.

Thus far, it will be seen, that the assertions of our Cotemporary are wholly untenable; the occurrences, however, of the last year, as well as those within the last month only have materially altered the prospects of the Opium-trade, even that outside and if, as there appears to us every reason to suppose, the Chinese Government continue their hostility to it, there is no saying how far the general trade may be influenced by it. That the Lintin trade has for a number of years existed without being essentially troubled, or without causing trouble to the foreign trade generally, is no reason why it may not become the source of persecution hereafter. The circumstances under which it now exists are very different from those of former years. We all know that year after year the quantities have encreased, until last year they exceeded 26,700 Chests. At the beginning of this trade, from the quantities being more less, and from the vice of smoking being much less general, it created not the attention of the rulers, but the evil grew little by little; until it became evident to every observer; the attention of the Government was called to it, and though the local authorities succeeded for a time to set at naught the Imperial orders, the vice increasing continually, all the energies of the Government were roused for its suppression, and the higher officers at last are now obliged to lend their active aid. It may therefore, with every show of probability, be predicted that the measures of the Government, not only against the river-trade, but against that outside also, will be more energetic, and that, if their preventive service is found ineffective, they may possibly have recourse against the trade of the foreign merchants in Canton, who are well known to direct the outside Opium trade. But even, without this, if the Government merely follows up its measures, there is every prospect of the consumption of the drug during this year to be not half of what it was last. We shall next week publish a proclamation by the Vice-roy, by some supposed to be from his own pen, and said to be a production of great literary merit, which want of space does not permit us to publish in this numb r

The Official Notice from H. M. Chief Superintendent, as well as the letter from Britannicus, and the hoisting of the Union Jack have called our attention to the proceedings of that officer. We sincerely regret that the notice which Capt. Elliot gives should be so very unsatisfactory to most of H. B. M. subjects, but that it so is by no means singular, since it leaves them altogether in the dark by what means Capt. Elliot has at last succeeded in establishing a communication with the Vice-roy through the Kwang-chou-foo and the Kwang-chou-he. The extracts from this correspondence with which Capt. Elliot has favored the community are carefully garbled from letters which contain, so at least we are assured by the well imformed, many curious things, such as the expression of Capt. Elliot's fear of reprimand from his own sovereign if the Vice roy does not through the Kwang chou-foo etc send him his sealed orders which he hopes there can be no objection to, since he has found out that inferior officers always address the Vice-roy by pin instead of lung on which latter mode of communication he had hitherto erroneously insisted, but that in future he shall always use pins. To this the Vice-roy, we believe, answers by expressing his surprise that he (Elliot) should have been so ignorant as to think him-elf the Vice-roy's equal, though he should have known better, being a servant of a king who himself had been reverently submissive. Upon receiving this letter, of which we may be able in our next to lay a copy before our readers, having been disappointed in our hopes to obtain it in time for simultaneous publication with Capt. Elliots" notice, the superintendent on Sunday last hoisted his flag.

That a Consular Agent of a foreign power, in addressing an officer of such high rank as the Vice-roy of two provinces, should do so in the same manner in which officers of rank among the Chinese address him, appears unobjectionable, it is only a matter of surprise that this has not been done long before. There are two ways of addressing the head of the provincial government here, viz., by employing the term Tsze or document from an equal to an equal, called by our correspondent "Britannicus" a letter. The second manner is by making use of the character pin, or document from an inferior to a superior, translated by our correspondent, a petition. The Vice-roy says, that it is permitted to none, save and except to foreign KINGS to employ the character Tsze, in other words to treat him on a footing of equality: and excepting Kings all foreigners whatsoever must use the character pin, or in other words address him as their superior. Now Lord Napier on his arrival, and afterwards Capt. Elliot, when he went to the City gate accompanied by Mr. Gutzlaff, insisted on communicating with the Vice-roy on a footing of equality: Capt. Elliot early in 1837 abandoned this pretension, and communicated with the Vice roy in the style of the Vice roy's inferior. After a few months had elapsed, he again took it into his head to renew his old pretention to equality, and now again for the fourth time he has changed his ground, and admits himself to be very much the Vice-roy's inferior! This is the strange inexplicable inconsistency of which our correspondent "Britannicus" complains, and we certainly think that such vacillating conduct, such tergiversation on the part of its representative here, can impress the Chinese authorities with no very favorable idea, of the wisdom of the British Government.

Having thus fully considered this matter of etiquette which has been set at rest by Capt. Elliot's submission, we proceed to consider the policy of the Superintendent's proceedings, and we fear that any jury of his countrymen empanelled to try the merits of his acts would give a verdict against him. We have already stated that Capt Elliot happened to be at Whampoa, when the riot of the 12th occurred, that he then came to Canton, and immediately commenced his labors to open a communication with the Vice-roy direct. The opportunity was favorable to his pretensions, he offering to the Chinese Government his assistance in driving the smuggling boats from the river. It is therefore not a matter of surprize that the Vice roy should have availed himself of these offers, and conceded, to obtain his cooperation, a point, to him, of little importance, but hitherto withheld. Whether Capt. Elliot's threats were really of use in making the Opium boats leave the river, or whether these would have left without his interference, may be a matter of doubt and as such we will give him the credit of having been really instrumental in putting down an abuse which had put in jeopardy the whole trade of the place, and which, if allowed to continue, must have disgraced the character of the community. Thus far, giving him the benefit of the doubt as to whether his acts contributed to it, have the Superintendent's proceedings been of use; but it may be asked whether, to obtain this momentary good, he has not involved himself in greater difficulties than ever. he has stated to the Vice roy that his Government disapproves of the smuggling of Opium on the river; is he prepared to inform the Chinese government that the same are H. M.'s sentiments with regard to the Lintin trade? We should think not. That the Vice-roy will very shortly require of him to order those ships away, we have, considering circumstances at present, little doubt, and what will then be Capt. Elliot's answer? Why, that his authority extends only to the Bogue, and that he has none over his countrymen outside. Will not then probably the Vice-roy treat him with such scorn, as to require of him a.. .o haul down his flag? All this we are almost certain must happen. Much better had it been for Capt. Elliot had he assisted his Co-Superintendent, Mr. Johnston in doing nothing at Macao, and better probably also for the British community, many of whom, we believe, share on this subject the sentiments of our Correspondent Britannicus.

Another part which appears to us very unsatisfactory is Capt. Elliot's declaration is that "it is out of his power to publish his instructions. it is at the same time his duty to promulgate (as he has always done and always will). whatever it may concern the interests of Her Majesty's subjects should be generally kuown". Capt. Elliot then goes on to state that, her majesty's government will give no countenance to proceedings of the kind (i. e. smuggling on the river), and he requests it may be plainly understood that he is conveying the unequivocal sentiments of his instructions. All this reads very odd—surely, there can be no objection to publishing such part of his instructions as bear on the subjec! his countrymen would follow his injunctions much more readily were they morally assured that such instructions do exist, and if they knew their precise nature.

We now arrive at another knotty point which seems to require elu idation On the 14th December 1838 Capt. Elliot gave public notice that the office of the chief superintendent of the trade of British subjects in China had been abolished, and that Capt. Elliot had been appointed chief of the commission. Accordingly, in a subsequent public notice dated 31st December, concerning the extension of the powers of the superintendent to Macao and Lintin, we find it signed by Charles Elliot and A. R. Johnston, as Superintendents of the trade &c., only. Yet, shortly after, Capt. Elliot resumes the abolished title of chief superintendent, and takes it now on every occasion. How far can the orders in council directed to the chief superintendent be applicable at present, that office having been abolished, and can Capt. Elliot be considered as invested with the powers the orders in council entrust to an officer holding an office since abolished, as we have shown, according to public notice from the superintendents? Considering this matter carefully, we cannot help coming to the conclusion, that the powers entrusted by H. M. on the chief superintendent are now inabeyance, and that the functions of the holder of the present title are nothing more nor less than those of a consul. We should like on this subject to have the views of some intelligent correspondent.

We are obliged to our Correspondent A. B., for his communication from Manila regarding the temporary prohibition of rice exportation, owing to a failure of the crop there, and to the high prices of that grain caused more by speculation of the natives than actual scarcity.

Another correspondent, who also signs A. B., puts the question whether by the English law all vessels are not obliged to take letters for their port of destination. We believe that by the English law all merchant vessels are obliged, under severe penalty, to take letter bags from the Post or Consular Offices. In the United States the law or practice is different; there commanders of vessels may refuse taking letters, and, we confess that to us this appears preferable and more equitable since a ship being private property, her owners should be entitled to her exclusive use, and the benefit the e from arising. If secrecy be required we see no reason why her owners should not refuse taking letters, in the same way as on land letters may be sent by coa ' to outstrip the regular post. These remarks apply not of course to general cargo ships, nor to the retention of letters, when once taken, at the port of destination. The English law on this subject is often evaded as well here as elsewhere, and we presume successful prosecution for the penalty would be a matter of much difficulty in most cases.

We are glad to learn that the Namhoy yune has required the professional services of Doctor Parker, and has already several times met him at Howqua's house. He has derived much benefit from Doctor Parker's treatment, in which he is said to place implicit confidence, and as proof of this, he has, a day or two since, also sent his son to the Doctor for the cure of Asthma from which he suffers The establishment of the Ophthalmic Hospital in Canton, independent of the relief it has already afforded to thousands, cannot fail to attract the favorable attention of the Chinese in general, and we now see an officer of high official rank so far waive the feelings of superiority over and contempt of foreigners, they are so fond to express on all occasions, as to apply for the Doctor's advice, a tacit acknowledgment that in medicine at least the barbarians are considered superior to the civilized sons of Han.

The inhabitants of the Imperial hong were alarmed by a fire breaking out in a chimney in one of the factories, on the 1st of this month, at half-past six in the evening. The engines were however soon on the spot, and the fire was stifled in its birth which was fortunate, the wind being high at the time. Another fire broke out at Fa-tee on Thursday night last, and is said to have de troyed a number of houses. The fire was distinctly visible from the terraces on the Factories.

"Formation of a Seamen's friend's Society at Canton. A meeting of residents was held yesterday 4th at No. 2 American factory, for the purpose of organising an Association in behalf of seamen visiting the port.

R. Turner, esq. having been called to the chair, the design of the Association was stated by Mr. King, followed by Rev. Dr. Parker, and the Rev. Mr. Bridgman.

The Association was then formed by unanimous resolution, and a committee of ten appointed to draft regulations, to be laid before an adjourned meeting, on Monday the 7th at 11 A. M."

We are obliged to a friend for the above short sketch of the proceedings at the meeting, we having been prevented, to our regret, from being present. The meeting on Monday next will, we hope, be as well attended as the important end in view requires.

Opium Smokers.

The following is an anonymous discourse, deprecating the use of opium, which is posted on almost every street of the town. Altho' the author gives himself out to be "a secluded scholar" it is supposed by many to come from the pen of the Viceroy himself. It is beautifully composed and would be no discredit to the first scholar of the land. We have taken a good deal of pains to translate it, but confess that we have not done justice to the beauty of the original, nor indeed is it in our power to do it justice. No language on earth, for pith, brevity, terseness, harmony of style, and apposite expressions, can be compared to the classic language of China! We must therefore beg our readers not to judge of the merits of the original, by the poverty of the translation. Indeed with the exception of admitting that it conveys something of the meaning of the original, it may be said of it, what a famous sinologue said of a somewhat similar performance, "frigida est et insulsa, nec aliter cum stark opiesaphe (log. sermone) componi potest, quam Thersites cum Achille!"

Of all the evils that afflict mankind, the greatest are those which he perversely brings upon himself. In his life, he not only builds up a line of conduct, that leads him to a miserable death, but contentedly sinks down to the lowest of his species, and becomes an object of hatred and scorn to his fellow men. Having perversely brought these evils upon himself which lead him to a miserable death: when he dies, no man pities him! contentedly sinking down to the lowest of his species, and becoming an object of hatred and contempt to his fellow men he is pleased with his depravity, which is not the original nature of man: to be not of the original nature of man then, and to die unpitied, is what belongs to reptiles, wild beasts dogs and swine, certainly not to the human species!

Why do I thus express myself? reptiles and wild beasts possess no knowledge, they are not aware of the infelicity of a miserable death, and they take no steps to guard against it! dogs and swine never heard of the expressions, right and wrong, glory and disgrace: they quietly receive the kicks and curses of man, and they remember not his insults with a blush of shame! Therefore it is, that men who by their own act have reduced themselves to a similar footing, are upbraided with being as reptiles, wild beasts, dogs and swine; and tho' they may be unwilling to submit to such degrading epithets, yet are they unable to shake off these appellations which have been so happily applied to them! But there are men still more brutish than the brutes! reptiles, wild beasts, dogs and swine, do not corrupt the morals of the age so as to cause one anxious thought to spring up in the breast of our gracious sovereign: Now however there are men who do so, who consequently are beneath reptiles, wild beasts, dogs and swine, and these men, are the smokers of Opium!

It is worthy of remark, that opium smoking commenced by one or two careless worthless fellows, who mutually instigated each other to this vicious indulgence, simply by way of amusement! When people begin to smoke, they at first observe no evil effects produced by it; when they have smoked for some time, they then require what is called renovation: when the time for renovating comes, if they do not smoke, then the hands and feet become weak and palsied, the mouth drops, the eyes become glazed, rheum flows from the one and slaver from the other, they are subject to complaints which resemble, phlegm, asthma and convulsive fits: when they arrive at this stage of the disease, every atom of human reason appears to have left them: You may beat them, scold them, curse them and insult them, yet will they not get up to give you any rejoinder! This is the first view showing how baneful opium is to human life!

And having smoked it still longer, the constitution begins to give way, the interior gradually decays, thousands of worms and maggots gnaw the intestines, their face becomes discolored, their teeth black, their appearance like charcoal, their shoulders rise to their ears, their necks shrink in, the thrapple protrudes, and their whole figure is hateful as that of a ghost or devil (which is the reason why they are called A peen kwei or opium smoking devils) and in fine they insensibly hug their bane, till death overtakes them in the very act! This is the second view that I present of the horrors of opium!

Further, people who are in the habit of smoking opium, require the most costly viands to nourish them, and of these costly viands, the renovating item is the most costly of all! Day by day it goes on encreasing from one and two mace, to five and six mace, there is no certain rule, but they reckon a mace of opium as among their necessaries of life. A man's wealth, as well as his strength, has it's bounds: even a rich man may not always be able to fill or replenish this leak in the cup, how much less then a poor man? The evil habit thus leads to one cruelly neglecting the comfort of his father and mother, and leads to his unfeelingly exposing his wife and children to cold and want, he cares not for his morning or evening meal, but to do without his opium, were impossible! This then is the third view that I present of the evils of opium!

Moreover, opium smokers, by indulging chiefly in their baneful habit at night-time, waste many candles and consume much oil. Till morning they do not sleep, and while the sun shines upon the world, and other men rise to go to work, the opium smoker alone is still in his slumbers! Thus by not getting up till midday in constant succession, the employé neglects his public duties, the scholar flings aside his book, the workman's occupation goes to ruin, the merchant drains his substance, the soldier and officer become slothful and impotent, and the servant lazy in obeying his master's commands: thus then, by it, time is mispent, duty neglected, wealth dissipated, life lost, and families overtaken by destruction! this is the fourth view that I present of the pernicious effects of opium!

Now, in reference to these four points of view in which I have shown opium to be a great calamity, it is not that people don't see it, it is not that people don't know it, but still such is the fact that with all this staring them in the face, they mutually hasten, they mutually urge each other to their bane, and contentedly yield up their lives, to it's noxious influence! As the waters of the great river flow to the east, and day by day roll on without ceasing, so we find of this evil habit, when it first began, that those who smoked, avoided the gaze of other men, they kept their shame secret and feared to avow it; now however it is taken in public, and even served up as a treat to guests and strangers! At first, none but slaves and the vilest of the vile smoked it; now however it has infected the capped and gowned gentry of the land! At first it was merely used by the people of Canton and Fokien and those parts which border on the sea, now however it has gone east and west, it has crossed the frontiers into Tartary, nor is there a province of the empire where it has not found it's way! At first none but a few depraved wretches of the male sex used it, and now we find that even Bonzes, Taou priests, married women, and young girls are addicted to the life-destroying drug. In every item! in every respect! is the evil becoming daily more grave, more deeply rooted than before! so much so that it's baneful influence seems to threaten little by little to degrade the whole population of the Celestial Empire to a level with reptiles, wild beasts, dogs and swine! When the people of our Empire shall have been degraded to this brutish level, then the three relations will be annihilated,* the nine laws or punishments will cease to act, the five businesses of life will be utterly neglected, man's reason at an end for ever, and unnumbered woes will arise! From the time that there ever was people until now, never, never, was there a calamity, which, in it's first beginnings so bland, so bewitching, threatens to consume all things with its blaze-like as this fearful drug!

Above, our sovereign, and his virtuous ministers brood over this national misfortune, and lament the havoc it has made: below, all good men, and all disinterested employe's exert themselves to counteract it's effects, yet are they unable to arrest it's progress! When one reflects on all these things, even granting that the final sentence of the law should be awarded to those men who have caused such disasters, who is there that may lift up his voice and say, "it would not be right so to do?" Nor does the evil stop here. Those foreigners by means of their poison dupe and befool the natives of China! It is not only that year by year they abstract thereby many millions of our money, but the direful appearances seem to indicate a wish on their part, utterly to root out and extinguish us as a people!† I repeat, that from the time of our becoming a nation until now, never did any evil, at first so bland so enticing, blaze so fearfully as does this dreaful poison!

My countrymen of China well know the dangerous position they stand in, yet they contentedly hug their bane which brings on them ruin and death! Thus it is, that by land and by water, in the public markets and in the mountain passes, those who sell opium, are to be met with by hundreds, and by thousands at a time! These are all so many cut, throat ruffians, as careless of their own lives, as of those of others; they go about with their swords and spears all prepared, in order to prosecute with violence their illegal calling: equally depraved are the police and soldiery, for they, in order to turn their employment to good account, pretend that they are searching for the prohibited drug, and under this excuse turn the baggage of the lawful traveller upside down, and subject good people to every species of annoyance. These evils and abuses day by day become more wide-spreading, more deeply-rooted, and they are entirely brought on by the smokers of opium! When I reflect upon this, it seems to me, that, though every one of these said opium-smokers should be exterminated, yet would not their death be sufficient to atone for the crimes they have committed, for the evils they have brought about!

Now I have heard that our gracious Emperor, after mature consultation, is about to take this abandoned class of his subjects and utterly cut them off! the necessity of the case imperiously calls for it, and reason strongly justifies the measure! Why is it that I thus express myself? Why, because a crime committed against an individual, against his property, or against a fraction of the community, is a small matter compared with one which threatens to put the whole Empire in a blaze! and amidst a calamity which thus affects the country from one end to another, is our sovereign lord to sit quietly looking on and see it raging, without putting forth the rod of his power to punish and repress! Moreover such are the dictates of reason that guide mankind: where there are those who degrade themselves to a level with reptiles, wild beasts, dogs and swine, their fellow men despise them: where their fellow men despise them, they also reject and cast them off: thus misery is superadded to misery, and looking upon them like birds of prey, we may hunt them down, or as herbs, we may root them up, without the least feeling of pity or compunction! it is only they, who have brought this woe upon themselves!

Now although happiness is built upon a foundation, misery has also a source from which it springs, and amidst the discord of those warring principles it belongs to those above, to seize the opportunity of bringing forth good out of evil! In reference to this, Chin Tung foo has said, "When the bulk of "the people are joyfully hastening to their ruin, "and when it is not in the power of gods or devils "to change their course, man can do it! and if it be "asked me, how can man change their course? I "reply, by killing-in order to stay killing!" (i. e. by putting a few to death, as an example and warning to others.) Now therefore in reference to the opium smokers, if we do not impose those laws upon them, they will die from the pernicious properties of the drug:—if we do impose these laws upon them, then they will die under the hand of the executioner:—but it seems better that a few should perish under the hand of the executioner, with the prospect of being able to arrest the evil, than that they should die from opium and our race become exterminated!

Again: there are appearances in nature as if heaven‡ and earth at times repent of unnecessary severity; moreover the holiest of men trembles while punishing wickedness, if he has not distinctly warned the parties before hand. Obscure individual that I am, not being in the situation of the high officers of government, I cannot presume to know or regulate their plans, and for me thus to obtrude my impertinent advice, may justly be reckoned unto me as a crime! But I look upon ye all as of the same species with myself, as my brethren of the human race: in the midst of my retirement I have thought of your situation with grief and pain: and I deeply pity you, seeing the terrors of the law about to take hold of you! I have therefore composed a short discourse, which with the kindest bowels of compassion, I offer up for your perusal, earnestly hoping that my brethren will give good heed to the faithfulness of my intentions, and deeply ponder upon my words! It is to the following effect!

Every man who is endowed with the gift of reason, knows to prize his life above all things: from the time our feeble body is a carce a cubit high, if it be wounded, we mourn and weep! In childhood, when traversing a dangerous road at dead midnight, we tremble and mutually warn each other to beware; whatever enticement may be held out, we reject it with suspicion and feel alarmed to proceed: this is, because we fear to die! And when grown to man's estate, whatever is noxious to our persons, we endeavor to avoid with the utmost anxiety; if we cannot succeed in avoiding it, we feel sorrowful and perhaps repair to a temple to implore divine aid. From childhood till old age, without distinguishing between the virtuous and the depraved, the noble and the base, the object of all our active exertions by night and by day, the object for which we rack our minds with the most intense anxiety, is merely to obtain what will benefit us, and avoid what will injure us; to follow after happiness, to shun misery, and nothing more. If we are overcome by dangers or sickness, we are sad: if informed that we are about to die, we are sorrowful: such is the nature of man, and opium smokers offer the only exception! These run after their death! these sit contentedly on the brink of danger! even as the silly moth, which keeps fluttering round the candle which consumes him! Among men, there is no one who does not like the idea of making his name famous or honorable: if you upbraid a man with being depraved, he gets angry: if you still further insult him, by telling him that his heart is cruel as that of a wild beast or bird of prey, that he is deficient of knowledge as the reptile that crawls on the ground, and that he cannot be classed as one of the human species: methinks that at language of this kind, his eyes must "like stars start from "their spheres! and each particular hair must stand "on end like quills upon the fitful porcupine"! He must put himself in a posture of defiance, and hurl back the reproach with a curse! But opium smokers are alone different in this respect! They, it is true, do not wish to receive such insults, but not wishing to receive the name, and doing that which induces the appellation, is very much the same as sitting down contentedly under the reproach. Therefore it is, that they who smoke opium and clearly know that it is destroying their life, are guilty of folly: they who smoke opium, and know that while they do so, it is sullying their name and reputation, are lost to every sense of shame! and those who associate with the lowest of the low, the vilest of the vile, and who in the company of such, turn day into night, have forgotten every rule of decency and propriety! To smoke opium, and not to look after the comfort of your parents, is to play the part of an undutiful child! to smoke opium and give no heed to the instruction of your son, is not fulfilling your duty as a father! to smoke opium and care not tho' your wife suffer cold and want, is what no kind husband would do: to corrupt the manners and customs of the age, and entail calamities upon posterity, is to be a robber, of the world: to violate the laws, to break thro' the regulations, and not to repent of your crime, is the conduct of a rebel: to take the intelligent and educated mind of a Chinese, and prostitute it so as to be duped by distant foreigners, with their corroding poison; to heap up unnumbered crimes, to refuse to awake from your delusion, and to die with it in your embrace, shows that ye know not reason, and that your hearts are like those of the brutes!

Now then ye who smoke opium! look at the nine foregoing crimes that ye commit! and when ye take up the opium pipe to smoke, do one and all of you put the hand upon the heart, and ask yourselves: Do I deserve death, or not? ought I to leave off this hateful vice, or not? People who have rebelled against high heaven, who have injured their fellow men, who have opposed reason, who have trampled on the five relations of mankind, who have set at defiance every rule of decency and propriety: methinks that tho' our sovereign's laws may not slay them, yet that heaven and earth, Gods and spirits, must exterminate them with their avenging lightning! And though you may escape our human punishments, think you that you can escape the punishment of heaven! although you have human faces and dress like men, tho' your houses may overflow with wealth and you may fare on dainties every day, yet looked as you are with every species of guilt, I can find no difference between you and reptiles, wild beasts, dogs and swine! can ye bear a reproach of this kind, without starting with horror! without the cold sweat trickling adown your foreheads!

Before I finish, a word to you who are mandarins, and employe's in government offices. It belongs to you to rule the people! You try their crimes, and you awar l their punishments! Let me ask of you, supposing you were called upon to judge your own crimes in this respect, pray by what law or statute would you judge them? And ye who are scholars and learned men! Ye have already studied a great many works! Ye know what propriety is! Let me then ask of you, supposing you were called upon to give an opinion of your own conduct in this respect, pray under what standard of propriety would you class it? For the operative, for the merchant, and for every class and description of the people, are there laws made and punishments annexed,—but for you!.....

Tang, Viceroy of Canton &c. &c. proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

Whereas on the 21st day, of the 11th moon, of the 18th year of Taoukwang, (6th January 1839) the foreign merchants Jardine and others presented a petition to the following effect.

"To H. E. the Viceroy of Canton, &c. &c., a respectful petition.—The undersigned foreign merchants beg respectfully to lay before H. E. the Viceroy the following facts. There are now 17 vessels at Whampoa which the Hong merchants, one and all, refuse to secure, though they have been there for weeks. There are also now six vessels at Lintin and in Macao roads, the commanders of which have applied to us to know whether they can be secured, and we wait your Excellency's reply to this, to be able to give them an answer.

"We further beg leave to bring to your Excellency's notice that for many months past we have experienced so much difficulty in getting respectable Hongs to secure ships, that we have been under the necessity of applying to the poorest hongs; and instances are not wanting of property there deposited having been sold, and the proceeds dissipated without our having given any directions for the sale. As a remedy for this evil we would humbly suggest to your Excellency the propriety of ordering the Hong merchants to secure ships in rotation, beginning by the senior Hong, and returning to it after each Hong has secured one ship, as was formerly the case with the Company's ships.

"The burthen of securing ships would, by this plan, be equally divided among the members of the Cohong, and the foreigners would be certain of having their vessels secured by paying the usual fees to the securing hong. We remain etc. Signed by most of the foreign merchants."

And this coming before me the Viceroy, I find that it is the old regulation, that when foreign merchant ships come to Canton to trade, they must cast anchor at Whampoa, when the senior Hong merchants must in rotation take upon themselves the management and control, and proceed with the said security merchant to examine clearly the said ship or ships: if there is no opium on board, then the security merchant is to produce his bond, which is to be handed up to the authorities, when after mature consideration, permission will be given to open the ship's holds. And now again it appears that I, the Viceroy, have given these same instructions in an edict, viz, that the senior Hong merchants take upon themselves the control and management of the foreign ships by turns, and proceed with the said securing merchant to examine if there is no opium on board, which done, the security Merchant is to produce his bond, have it handed up to (the Hoppo) and await permission to have the holds opened; all this is on record.

Now however according to what is stated in the petition, I find that there are no less than seventeen ships anchored at Whampoa, and have been there for several weeks, and yet are not secured! How is this then that the security merchants have not secured them? it really is matter of amazement to me!

I therefore unite the circumstances and issue this edict, and when the edict reaches the said Hong merchants, let them instantly examine into the facts stated in the petition, and let me know why it is that these ships have been there so long without being secured, and how it is, that having received my previous edict, they did not think fit to obey! Whether it is that the said foreign ships have been smuggling opium, or whether it is that the Hong merchants have been borrowing the plea, that they were examining, to be obstinate and put difficulties in the way. I hereby limit three days, within which they must petition, and inform me of the real circumstances of the case, that I may examine and act accordingly. Do not make any false excuses in order to gain delay!

* The three relations, (or bonds) viz, prince and people, father and son, husband and wife.

† Many Chinese are under an impression that it is our object to take their country by means of opium.

‡ Heaven is said to repent of severity by the Chinese e. g. supposing heaven to have visited the land with long drought, when the refreshing rain falls, this is said to be a proof of heaven repenting, and vice versa. The meaning of the author is, that as heaven has been cruel in permitting the opium poison to rage over the land, perhaps he will relent and bless the vigorous measures we are now taking to put a stop to it.

Communicate this edict to the said foreigners, that they wait quietly till the affair has been investigated into, and the commands issued. Do not let them again come to annoy me thus!

A very special edict.

Mr Turner being in the Chair, the report of the provisional committee, appointed to draft a constitution, was read, and after discuss on and some amendments, was unanimously adopted.

The following gentlemen were then chosen as the committee for the ensuing year, viz: Messrs. Bridgman, Turner, J. M'Gowan, Leslie, Wetmore, How, Low, King, & Trademan.

It was then resolved that the following gentlemen be requested to act as agents for the association, viz:

At Whampoa, the commodores (ex officio) and Dr. Holgate.

The committee were them instructed to notify the British and foreign Sailor's Society, the American Seamen's friends Society &c. &c. of the formation of the association, and to transmit to them, along with copies of the constitution, assurances of their best support in any measures they may take (especially by the mission of chaplains), in behalf of the seamen coming within the Chinese waters.

Notice of the committee's first meeting was then given, and after thanks to the chair, the meeting adjourned.

CAPT. ELLIOT'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE VICE-ROY.

* Tang, Vice-roy of Quangtung and Quangse &c. &c. proclaims to the Hong-merchants for their full information:

Where as on the 7th day, of the 11th mon, of the 18th year of Taoukwang (23d Dec. 1838) the English Superintendent Elliot petitions to the following effect.

"A duly prepared petition, because of people opposing the laws involving those who keep the laws, and thereby putting life and property in danger, the petitioner prays that a distinction be made, protecting these and punishing those, viz.

"The said Superintendent has lately heard, that because of people dealing in prohibited articles, a stoppage of the Trade has been brought about. He finds on examining into it's rise and progress, that it began at first by a sampan conveying on board Opium with a view to profit, and having been so lucky as to escape being taken or examined, the evil custom kept gradually going on, this one imitating that one, until the sore became ripe, and this contraband trade came to be looked upon as a mere matter of course. Now it appears that a discovery has taken place, and while it is right that the sampans abide the consequences, it is only to be feared that the fair dealing merchant may be involved by this stoppage of the trade. But if we allow the grain and the common stone (i. e. the wheat and the tares) to be burned up together, and as for those who keep the laws, if we look on and see them about to lose property and life, and see the good name of our country disgraced, not only will the rectpectability of our said country and her mandarin regubtions be thus lost, but the capital and goods of her merchants and subjects be diminished, and we strangers residing in the inner land, will be without a rule or method for transacting a single affair, which would be without benefit, or any thing but advantageous. Now in reference to this, "assembled mosquitoes make thunder" (i. e. every body talking so, the noise cannot but be heard) and he who controls them, finds it is exceedingly difficult to grasp his rod of authority. The most important and fatal consequences would certainly follow, were he who breaks the laws to be permitted to reap profit as he desired, while he who keeps the laws, is to be involved in ruin! This has led to a contention or struggle between the good and the bad, causing unnumbered evils to come forth, and the appearances of blood to spring up in abundance; these appearances, I say, are not only what your inner land does not allow, but what our own country will not easily pardon. Moreover thinking of these things morning and night, my anxious heart is not at peace, and from the vehement desire that I feel to do away with these abuses, I cannot indeed lay my head upon a tranquil pillow!

The object of this is to state that on the 2nd day of the present moon (18th Dec) I the Superintendent, took all these circumstances and laid them clearly before the foreigners, and as for these said sampans which belong to my native country, I limited three days, within which they were forthwith to leave the port. Now however the term is expired, and it does not appear that the said sampans have obeyed orders, and gone away. I the Superintendent wish to compel them, but I have no clear instruction (lit. luminous document) to hold in my hand; therefore is this business very difficult to take up and transact. I have no resource but fervently to request your excellency, that you will have the goodness to order the Quang-chow-foo and the Quang-heep to send me a mandarin chop stamped and sealed up, conveying your excellency's orders to me the Superintendent, which I in my turn will then be able to declare (to my countrymen) causing them to believe my words. If there are those who still insist on pursuing their irregularities as before, then let the laws of the inner land deal with them as sternly as they list, my own country cannot have a syllable to say in their behalf: it is they themselves who bring all these evil consequences contendingly upon themselves, and they cannot say that I the Superintendent have not clearly warned them before hand! The laws of our own country deal towards those who oppose them, with the utmost severity, in their principle or basis, is quite the same as those of the central land.

If your excellency will have the goodness to give me the powers I have requested, then I the Superintendent will forthwith again cause these sampans to leave the port, I will not allow the smallest fraction of one to loiter about: if the people of any of these sampans are obstinate and fractious and will not go away, then I have to request that your excellency will send a Weiyuen (or specially appointed officer) whom I the Superintendent will accompany, and we shall set to work with sober seriousness. We shall know how to draw a line of distinction between the good and the bad ships, taking these and driving them out, in order that those may not be involved in the consequences of their guilt. In reference to the stamped and sealed document that I have requested from the Quang-chow-foo and the Quang-heep, should this be granted, it is not foolishly begged for that I the Superintendent may use it to make a noble and honorable man of myself by means of it, but it is that I may have distinct orders, and if any such important business such as this should happen, then the Superintendent being in the predicament of having no power or authority, will not be able to undertake any thing. If however I receive these clear orders, then looking up with respect to your excellency, I may as it were borrow a portion of your excellency's dignity, and the Chief minister of my native country, as well as her merchants can all believe be this sign that I have received your excellency's command, and moreover the law breakers knowing this will fear and tremble! If any little every day matters of no importance occur, then it is proper that I respectfully submit to the old estab i-hed regulations, and as before receive your commands thro' the Hong-merchants; but if the affair be (like this) out of the common run I cannot but earnestly request, that your excellency will examine into the circumstances of the case, and grant me that authority which is requisite and proper for thus prosecuting my public avocations. This is an argument applicable to both ancient and modern times, and my prayer is upon no account urged for any private or selfish views.

Now again I the Superintendent beg to state clearly, that I have just heard (for the first time?) with deep respect, that in accordance with the rules and ceremonies of the Heavenly dynasty, when ever any mandarin of the second rank has occasion to send a public document to your excellency, he uses the style and form of a petition. That this is the rule, my native country never respectfully heard of before, which is the reason why I the Superintendent did not dare take it upon myself to write for a long time to enquire after your excellency's health and repose: Now however because the affair is urgent, on one hand I feel grieved for the respectability of my native country, on the other hand I feel anxious about it's subjects, therefore it is that I don't shrink from the rebuke of my country and in the meantime venture to address you. Now I must earnestly beg of your excellency, that you will desire the Quang-chow-foo and the Quang-heep, to take up all the circumstances connected with the writing of the word or title of petition (and consequently cause to me in an edict, that I may thus be able to transmit it to my native country in order thereby to avert the anger or scolding of my sovereign, and afterwards I can always use the term petition, by which means our public business will be conducted with safety and tranquillity, and those within and those without may enjoy peace and harmony. If I act thus, I will be able on one hand to discharge my duty as a faithful subject to my native country, and on the other hand to fulfil my trust as an employé in protecting and rewarding the good and virtuous.

Again I have heard that a seizure of Opium took place on the 17th of the 10th mon (3rd Dec.) This was entirely the fault or crime of Lang, and had no reference to his two coolies Taw a ying and Chan a he. Ines told them to go to the river's side and carry for him some boxes of silver (dollars) which shows that these said two men knew nothing whatever about the contents: If your Excellency will only have the goodness to forgive them and let them go, then all my fellow countrymen will feel delighted and extol your goodness and justice for ever and ever! This I petition your excellency &c. &c.*

Now all this coming before me the Viceroy, I find that this said Superintendent Elliot, has received commands from the sovereign of his country to proceed to Canton for the due managing of his country's merchants and sailors, to constrain the rogues by his sway, and to extirpate their vices and defects. If he has received such commands, it necessarily follows that he must have authority, how comes it then that these sampans oppose the regulations? that they toil illegally into port? that he cannot make all the foreigners believe him? that he should find any difficulty in driving them out? this is really what I cannot understand! nevertheless as it appears by the facts mentioned in the foregoing petition, where he states distinctly—"that not only does the central land not permit such proceedings, but that even his own country will not tolerate them, and that he "wishes speedily to get rid of the evil practices &c. &c." this shows some disposition to take away the bad, in order to secure the good, which proves that he possesses sense and intelligence. Moreover, as he does not screen himself behind the difficulty of the case by saying that he has no power or authority, under these circumstances a bigotted adherence to rules and forms which would leave his good intentions unsupported would be far from correct. I therefore grant what you petition for, and thereby desire the Quang-chow-foo and the Quang-heep to give you the stamped orders you ask for, as rendered necessary by the circumstances of the case, and having received these orders, you have a reason or authority for putting them in force; afterwards in any communication relating to ordinary occurrences, you must as before receive your orders thro' the Hong-merchants, you may not bring forward this as a rule or precedent. You the said superintendent must take these sampans and drive every one of them clean out, you must never, never, permit them to return more. If they dare refuse, do you immediately inform me of the same in a true petition, that I may set to work accordingly. I the Viceroy hold it my hand the sceptre of the two broad provinces; when any thing out of the way occurs, I have superabundance of power; I suspect that these sampans will not require of me the labour of one anxious thought! When these sampans shall have gone, the cargo ships may forthwith open their holds as before, indeed I had given orders that the trade was to be stopped for any great length of time. You the superintendent have no occasion to feel any anxiety about the matter.

In reference to that part of your petition where you speak about the different foreign countries sending up their documents for the information of the mandarins of the Heavenly dynasty, with the exception of their Kings (of whom it is permitted to employ the word letter, every person else, must use the term petition. This is a most important form to be observed between those within and those without, and hitherto it has never been exceeded but with the utmost disloyalty. The said superintendent is not a stupid man, how can he make such an excuse as that he did not know it? moreover the sovereign of your country has hitherto been respectfully submissive, and you his inferior officer ought to look up to him as your model, and (respectfully and submissively like your master?) discharge your duties according to the station you hold! If you do this, it is what you will be praised and exalted for; now that your good should be taken for evil and (instead of praise and exaltation) be imputed to you as a crime, this is still further what the said Superintendent has no occasion to feel the smallest anxiety about!

In reference to Taw a ying and the oth r criminal, these men are of the common people of our central land, that they be cheerlessly unto these words, and took opium upon their knees (i. e. involved themselves knowingly) they have already distinctly confessed, and now I have again desired the Anchia-sze to examine into the real facts of the case. We of the Heavenly dynasty are exceedingly careful in inflicting our punishments, we look it to and examine the real circumstances of his crime, that we may neither commit laxity or injustice! again in reference to this, you have no occasion to intercede in their behalf.

Writing these circumstances, I issue this my edict and when it reaches the principal security merchants let them forthwith communicate the same to the said Superintendent that he distinctly knows it. Do not oppose A special edict!

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,—Having observed an exceedingly scurrilous letter in your last paper signed "Britannicus," I beg to offer you a few remarks upon it.

That writer states in the outset of his letter that his intention is merely to review the public conduct and character of the British Senior Superintendent. Such review of any public servant's conduct or character, is a thing perfectly consonant with the liberty of the press, but while the English as well as we from the other side of the Atlantic should guard this holy palladium with the utmost jealousy, yet ought we to be equally cautious not to make it run to license. What I particularly dislike in "Britannicus" is his writing in the style of a lacena, while all the time he professes to hold in respect the doctrines of the lamb. By nature on this occasion to keep clear of all such wolfish spleen and hatred, all such naughty words and phrases, which, to use a well turned expression by of a correspondent of your's some two twelve-months ago, can proceed only from "the paltry malice of a disappointed smuggler." Perhaps my British brethren will pardon a foreigner interfering in their concerns, but when I observe a strong party feeling running through a community of the same nation, perhaps it may be a good deed for a stranger entirely unbiassed to step in, and perform the part of a peacemaker. If he can effect this, the good produced, will overbalance the guilt of unasked for interference.

My sentiments have been for some time before the public, and only in your last, I had the pleasure to demonstrate by mathematical infallibility, that the Opium Trade was a great evil. My confession of fealty, or political creed then, in reference to the Opium question, is summed up in the three following articles.

1st. I am opposed to the Opium Trade in toto, the prime object of my life being to do good to my fellowmen, not evil.

2ndly. I am still more opposed to bringing up Opium in boats to Whampoa, as in addition to the other evils connected with Opium, we have seen it with our own eyes cause a temporary stoppage of the trade, a circumstance that may daily occur should it again be resorted to: we have seen it cause the degradation of an innocent Hong-merchant, and very nearly the expulsion of an equally innocent foreign merchant, and should the river trade be again resorted to, the very same scene may again be acted over, and we may not get out of the scrape so easily. I further object to the river trade as it brings a number of people about Canton, who, to use the mildest phrase, are no additions to the respectability of the foreign community: and lastly I object to it, as we have no right to keep the Hong-merchants in perpetual terrorem, for the simple reason that we would not like them to do to unto us. Nor is it just and right that one man, or two or three men, in order to make a few dollars to themselves, should put in jeopardy the whole foreign trade. Combining all these circumstances, I think that Capt. Elliot deserves the thanks of the community for having driven out these Opium boats, nay more, that his duty would require him to oppose their entrance, should this ever be attempted again.

3rdly. Still more am I opposed to bringing up Opium in ships. How can any man advocate a system, where commanders of ships, otherwise honorable men enough, are in the habit of forfeiting their word of honor either actually given or implied? It is known that before a ship can be secured, the Captain must sign a bond that he has no opium on board. Well, it is very possible that at that precise moment he may not have opium on board, though afterwards he takes a few hundred in any quantity. Meanwhile the wretched Hong-merchant, implicitly relying upon the foreigner's good faith, looks upon the treacherous bond as ample security, but one day or other a disclosure takes place, and the Hong-merchant is hurried from his family to the public prison, he loses his liberty, he is mulcted of his property, and so severe are the laws now on that point, that such a discovery would go near to touch his very life! And where is the man who can stand up to defend a system of morals, a code of honor like this? I should certainly think the British Superintendent bound to see that no more doings of this kind are carried on in the ships of his country, as was the case last year!

I have therefore clearly demonstrated that Capt. Elliot, is entitled to the thanks of the community for the good that he has done.

Britannicus remarks something about the British flag being stained with dishonor.—Begging Mr. Britannicus' pardon, I think this arrant nonsense. Why, what is a flag? A few square yards of party-coloured bunting, nothing more. It don't matter ten cents whether it be hauled up or down! I can call this portion of Britannicus' letter nothing but sheer "mad barking," mere idle rhodomontade, and not worthy of further notice. Equally so is that portion of it where he says that the Vice-roy states to Capt. Elliot, that the King or Queen of his country has hitherto been reverentially submissive, or some such expression. Why what is that after all? Has not the Vice-roy said so a dozen times before of the whole of us? Words are but wind, Mr. Editor, and the Chinese characters are like our own, mere black marks up in a white ground; Capt. Elliot showed his great good sense in treating them with the contempt they deserved. Again Britannicus calls upon Capt. Elliot in a very rude manner to produce his orders or instructions. But from the days of Sir John Falstaff until now, no man was ever bound to give a reason on compulsion. Were I Capt. Elliot I would refuse to show my orders until requested to do so with due civility. Sir! cries Britannicus, you have disgraced your country by the vacillating way in which you have conducted your correspondence with the Chinese authorities! Have not you shifted your course four times? Well, an' suppose I have, quoth Capt. Elliot, you would not sure y have me sail in the wind's eye of my instructions, would you? Produce your instructions! you frustrates Britannicus. Pll do nothing of the kind first coolly yet politely respon's the Superintendent.

Tis then is where the grand difficulty lies—ou-ht Capt. Elliot to produce his instructions, or not? Mr. Editor, will you grant me one thing? Has not a man a right to do what he will with his own, Mr. Editor? Grant we but this axiom sir, and I will make the conclusion as clear, as clear, Sir, as one of my own postulates. I say boldly that he has, they are his orders, they are his instructions, and I don't see what on earth any other man has got to do with them! It is written in the Book, "I on shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people" and I think that any Englishman plays a most unjustifiable part, who gives Capt. in Elliot the slightest annoyance, or offers to put any illbred obstructions in his way. Moreover, has not Capt. Elliot acted openly and fairly? Has he not told you, that if he injures you, the Courts of Law are as open to you, as is the London tavern? and that he will be prepared to give all comers the most legitimate satisfaction that he can wish for? Law in England, it is true, is a little expensive, but no one ever ventured to impugn the honor of an English Court, and the results of a lawsuit there, are quite as satisfactory in the main, as they are in any other civilized country.

I see moreover that the Editor of the Register has somehow or other managed to obtain a copy of the British Superintendent's correspondence with the Viceroy. I don't know that this is quite proper. Can't the Superintendent lay on his own private correspondence with the authorities, without the whole arcana of his diplomacy being rudely exposed to the public gaze? Besides does not he say, that he will tell the public as much as he thinks will do them good to know? or words to that effect? Now what reasonable man can wish for more? Politics are a vasty deep, Mr. Editor; when a man launches his skiff thereon, it is hard to say when he will gain the shore again. Politics confuse an Englishman's or American's head quite as much as Opium does that of a Chinese. Now the Viceroy remarks very sensibly to the Canton people, that they cannot both smoke Opium and attend to their business, equally kind is Capt. Elliot to his countrymen, who wishes them to pursue their mercantile transactions, to "catchee number one large proff," and not bewilder their heads in the mazes of Chinese politics and correspondence. For this Capt. Elliot merits the public thanks of the community, instead of being bayed at and worried by snapish curs like Britannicus. It is true that at the public meeting he held at the Company's hall about a month ago, he told us he held the instructions of his government upon the subject in his hand, and again in his correspondence with the Viceroy it is said that he has none, this I confess looks at first a little like a contradiction, but have not the least doubt that the mo-sent it meets Capt. Elliot's eye, he will explain it to the satisfaction of every body.

Now then, Mr. Editor, being about to conclude this letter I cannot do better than to throw the whole into the form of a mathematical demonstration, especially seeing that my last was so well received by the public.

Axiom. That Capt. Elliot is a very good, upright, and clever man.

Postulate 1st. Let it be granted, that all good and upright men approve of the measures that Capt. Elliot has taken.

Postulate 2nd. Let it be granted, that none but disappointed Opium smugglers, such as Britannicus, offer thereto the slightest opposition—then will follow:

The major consequence, that Capt. Elliot should be rewarded by the community with some solid mark of their esteem and approbation—and,

The minor consequence, that Britannicus and his smuggling adherents should be tarred and feathered.

CANTON PRESS.

Another edict against the smoking of Opium has been issued by the Viceroy during the week, as will be seen from our columns, and the Opium trade continues absolutely stopped. It is, however, rumoured that in many parts of the country the police have met with resistance when intending to search houses, and it is even said that in a town in this province, the people have bid open defiance to the government—have not only not permitted the attempted search after opium—but have, to shew the little esteem in which they hold the Government orders, openly posted over their shop doors "Opium sold here." This boldness appears to be almost incredible, and this report needs confirmation to be believed. It is also confidently asserted, that the Governor of the Province of Pe-che lee has addressed a strong memorial to the Court (and of this document several copies have reached Canton, though we have as yet not been able to obtain one) representing the injustice and illegality of awarding the punishment of death to Opium-smokers, and denying the right of the Government to make any such sanguinary laws. It also appears that among the Chinese these rumours or accounts have caused a belief in a speedy abatement of the Government's severity against the Opium-trade; we, for the present see nothing to justify such a belief, for though the severity against the smokers may be relaxed, it does not follow that equal leniency will be shewn to dealers, and, in fact, two men were seized in a painter's shop in old China-street, only a few days ago, charged with having concealed opium there. It is perhaps not so much the severity of the government's measures against the dealers in opium, as the abuses these measures give rise to that cause them to be looked upon unfavorably by the Chinese in general. so much so indeed, it is said, as to have caused the determination in Canton to be general among them, to oppose forcibly any attempted search. It is said that for the sake of extortion, the police-runners them selves, or their friends, manage to hide some balls of Opium in a man's house—then denounce him to the authorities—are permitted to search—and of course find the Opium where they concealed it. An instance of this happened lately in a village near the Bogue. A young man was celebrating his marriage, and among the party feasted, were some who clandestinely entering his bedroom,

On French and other Foreign vessels the charges are slightly varied. The several fees paid to the Hoppo &c. on Rice laden ships amounting to $ 339.50., by a decision of the General Chamber of Commerce, are to be considered a charge on the vessel, as also the sum of $ 2.0— paid to the Linguist—making the whole charge on a Rice-ship, $ 1189.50— besides Pilotage inwards and outwards.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

No change has yet taken place in the state of foreign trade, the Hong-merchants being unwilling to secure ships without some guarantee on the part of foreigners that there shall be no smuggling of Opium or Sycee on board. and on the part of the government exemption from the degrading punishment lately inflicted on one of their body in the event of smuggling by foreigners. Matters are expected to be arranged within a few days. There are nearly 20 ships still unsecured with cargoes on board.

IMPORTS.

There has been an entire stagnation in all descriptions of goods and we have not heard of a single transaction in COTTON GOODS or WOOLLENS which are all however said so be in less demand, particularly LONGELLS.

METALS.—IRON and LEAD maintain their prices.

COTTON.—The sales have been on a very limited scale during the week. Some Bengal, we hear, was disposed of at some improvement on previous prices and good Bombay is rather firmer. Madras on the contrary has declined 1 @ 2 mace. The estimated stock in China at the present date, including all the late arrivals, consists of about,

Bombay,	Bengal,	Madras,	Total.
50,000	16,000	20,000	86,000 bales.

OPIUM.—No alteration whatever in the Canton market, severe measures and seizures still continuing, and the news from the coast is quite as unfavorable, some trifling sales merely being reported to the westward.

EXPORTS.

NANKING SILK.—No prices yet fixed, but the holders seem inclined more nearly to approximate to the view of buyers.

TEA.—Good and fine Congous have been settled by the Hong-merchants to some extent at from 24 a 30 Taels, and inferior at 21, but these can scarcely be considered as the established rates, the teamen generally demanding higher prices. It is not likely however that they will succeed in obtaining them. Some Souchongs and Pekoes have we hear, also been bought, Exports of Tea since the 1st July 1838: To America Souchong, 2899; Pouchong, 1089; Pekoe 46; Orange Pekoe, 127; Hyson, 1448; Young Hyson, 13174; Hysonskin, 1152; Gunpowder, 2350; Imperial, 1800; Total 4161 Piculs black and 20,124 Piculs Green Tea. To England, Fokien Bohea, 135; Canton Bohea, 355; Congo, 32,964; Caper, 197; Souchong, 2056; Campoy, 122; Ankoi, 523; Hong muey, 1158; Pekoe, 540; Orange Pekoe, 2519; Hyson, 5782; Young Hyson, 3373; Hysonskin, 3261; Twankay, 4862; Gunpowder, 3821; Imperial, 1642; Total 61,102 Piculs black and 22,246 Piculs green Tea.

EXCHANGE.—The Superintendent's bills were purchased at 4. 6½, so that the exchange on England generally may be considered to have advanced.

FREIGHTS.—From the delay in opening the Tea-market, and the uncertainty of procuring freights, several vessels, we understand, are purposing to proceed to India.

CANTON, 12th January, 1839.

Supplement to the Canton Press, No. 19, of 12th January, 1839.

concealed under it a small quantity of Opium. On the morrow police runners entered the house, and charging him with dealing in Opium, took it, with the young man, before the magistrate, who ordered him to be thrown into prison. The aged father of this young man, hearing of what had happened, immediately went to the Magistrate, protested in the strongest terms that his son had never been engaged in the smuggling of Opium, and offered his own bail and that of many of his friends, that his son might be released. The magistrate treated these assurances with contempt, on which the old man, in despair, dashed his brains out against the table and expired on the spot. The young wife of the prisoner then appeared to implore the release of her husband, but her intreaties meeting with no better success than those of the father, she in presence of the magistrate cut her throat. An account of these proceedings is said to have been forwarded to the authorities of Canton, and this must lead to strict investigation. Many similar instances of the dishonest practices of magistrates and police-runners are related, but none where the consequences have been so tragical.

"What Ben, my old hero, is this your renown?
Is this the new go?--kick a man when he's down.
When the foe has knocked under to tread on him then
By the fist of my father, I blush for thee, Ben."

Such is the quotation which heads some remarks in the Register, reproving us for having published a document from the Viceroy in our last paper, in which that functionary in coarse terms abuses H. M. Chief Superintendent. The Register, in imputing to us want of generosity, not only forgets that Capt. Elliot is not a fallen foe, but one, who by his own shewing has been triumphant in his late attempts to establish a direct correspondence with the Chinese authorities, that he has hoisted his flag, and that the end at which he has so long aimed has been gained, whether "to his own honor or to his nation's fame" is another question. However, the object of our having published the document in question seems to have been misunderstood; we by no means, approve of the uncourteous language of the Viceroy--we merely intended thereby to shew, what humiliations H. M. Superintendent has been exposed to previous to the consummation of his late brilliant success--to convince our readers that his temper is not easily ruffled--and to prove that, after having been so scurvily treated, he, to gain his object, nevertheless did not scruple to entreat the favorable notice in his behalf of his contemner

"Foul! foul!" all the lads of the fancy exclaim
CHARLEY SHOCK is electrified--BELCHER spits, flame--
And MOLINEUX -ay, even BLACKY cries "shame."

We omitted noticing in our last the melancholy death of Capt. Johnson, late of the Kellie Castle. It appears that while on his passage to Hong-Kong in the boat Lancet on the morning of the 29th December, between midnight and one o'clock, in the Capsuy-moon passage, he was knocked overboard by the main boom, and drowned. Capt. Johnson leaves a widow and two small children to deplore his untimely loss.

Want of space obliges us to disregard the recommendation of the Register, when quoting from it "to do it the justice to make a full and not a garbled quotation." We must continue to select, as occasion requires, such parts of its editorials only as may call for comment; for the remainder the curious are of necessity referred to the columns themselves of our cotemporary.

It will be seen, from the correspondence between the Viceroy and the foreign merchants, that the Hong merchants, are on the 7th instant required by the former to state within three days the reasons why they still refuse to secure the ships. We have, on a former occasion, stated that the cause of this refusal of the Cohong to secure ships newly arrived, was the treatment one of their body has recently suffered, and that they intended, until assured by the Governor that they were in future not to be subject to such degrading punishment, not to secure any newly arrived ships. The term allowed by the Governor has expired, but we do not hear that the matter has been mended, while other representations, complaining of the detention of the ships thus caused by the Hong merchants refusal, have been sent to the Viceroy within the last two days, and it is hoped that these reiterated complaints, coming from so many different people, will at last have the desired effect. One of these representations was presented at the City gates on Thursday last by a number of Commanders of ships now at Whampoa. It is generally expected that the Hong merchants will soon be obliged to withdraw their pretensions.

We have published a translation of the correspondence between Capt. Elliot and the Viceroy, of which H. M. Superintendent published extracts in our last paper. We have already at length referred to these documents on a former occasion, and have now merely to state, that Capt. Elliot's petition is translated from the copy contained in the Viceroy's answer, and that we suppose that in the document sent to Capt. Elliot, the names of the Kwang chow foo and the Kwang heep have been substituted for those of the Hong merchants as contained in our translation. In fact, Capt. Elliot's insisting on this change must have caused the delay in the delivery of this letter to which we alluded a fortnight since.

We understand that seven foreign passage boats have been tendered to the Comittee of the Chamber of Commerce, to avail themselves of the licence under the guarantee of that body. Several two masted boats, in attempting to pass the Bogue have lately been fired into, and one of them had one of her masts carried away by a shot. Others, with one mast, were allowed to proceed after having been furnished with a pass from the officers at the Bogue.

Manila, 22nd December, 1839.,

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.—On the 18th Inst. we received by the Rafaela London papers till the 28th of July. In the Times of the 10th of that month, it is stated under the head of "Madrid correspondence," that the Spanish Government had appointed Senor Lardizabal to supersede General Camba in the government of the Philippine Islands, under the pretext of General Camba having caused his wife to be interred with almost royal honours, and that the principal authorities of the place having declined to give their consent, he had treated them with the greatest indignity.

In the arrangements that were made for the interment of his Lady, it is quite notorious that the Governor took no further share, than to depore the irreparable loss which he had sustained—and in which melancholy duty he was joined by every one who enjoyed the honour of her acquaintance: and moreover, all the authorities of the Island and people from the neighbourhood, showed how sincerely they condoled with him in the loss he had sustained. The same funeral honours were paid to his deceased Lady—that would under similar circumstances have been paid to the General himself—and all the authorities attended the obsequies without opposition; with the exception of Don Jacobo Gil de Aballe, the suspended sub-inspector of Artillery. This person is reported to have said to the 2nd Officer of his brigade that such salutes did not correspond to the quality of the deceased; and he must have referred the case to the home Government, as on the 21st May last, a royal order was received in reply in which Her Majesty graciously approved of the expenditure of ammunition &c. &c., incurred in paying funeral obsequies to the deceased Lady of the Captain General of the Philippine Islands.

It is moreover important to know, that posterior to this, when the document was reclaimed from General Camba which authorised the expenditure of powder on the occasion of the said funeral, the General replied that he wished to pay the amount, until the pleasure of her Majesty should be known on the subject; and it is notorious that in March last he remitted to the sub inspector pro: tem: of Artillery something more than 67 dollars, which it appears was the value of the ammunition, as rendered by the said sub-inspector.

Whatever may have been the intention of inserting this tissue of falsehood in the Times, it must tend to disgust even the enemies of General Camba, who reposes tranquilly under the high reputation he has acquired for decision and zeal in the service of his Queen and country. Certain it is that the General on learning the purport of the article in the Times, merely remarked that his Government had no occasion to make use of ridiculous pretexts to justify his recall—that Her Majesty had only to issue her commands, and that his sense of duty as well as his inclination insured instant obedience.

Lew, Namhoy Yune &c., issues the following received from Tang, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces &c., for the purpose of urgently admonishing all opium smokers, instantly to flee the allurements of the drug, and to break off the vile habit; that his affection for his people may be manifested.

The use of opium corrupts the morals, ruins the reputation of families, eats away the substance, and shortens the span of life. The dreadful injury it inflicts were known by all; but formerly none feared the consequences of using it, the punishments being mild and the laws seldom enforced. The majesty of heaven is now roused to anger, and the most rigorous measures will be adopted. Both the civil and Military Officers have received the Imperial Commands; will any of them dare to slumber! Death will now quickly follow apprehension; repent then, my people, do not still remain blind to fear!

I the Governor have thought deeply and oft, upon the subject.—Rich and poor noble and mean, tyros and veteran smokers must all break off the habit.

The rich from their superior wealth are objects of envy to numbers, who will turn informers against them to Government for the sake of reward. Their neighbors will secretly inform against them and their servants guide the officers to their doors; Every path is fraught with dangers; every step lead to a precipice! Do not then ye rich delay to break off the habit.

The poor who have difficulty in gaining their daily meal can surely spare nothing wherewith to purchase the drug. Formerly when it was cheap they were enabled to purchase, but it is now so dear that they cannot. Do not then, ye poor, delay to break off the habit.

The nobles, whose bodies are clothed in rich vests and caps, and from whose mouths flow out the words of refinement, endeavor to conceal their vice from the world. Are such, as they, men! Their spirits will accompany them to the death that will follow their apprehension. They will disgrace both their ancestors and posterity. Do not, then, O nobles, delay to break off the habit.

Of the lower orders (putting aside all prostitutes and play-actors, whom I consider as no better than the pigs and dogs) many gain a profitable livelihood as followers and attendants of the Government Officers; but if they do not soon heal themselves of the habit, who will trust them as followers! What officer will employ them as soldiers and police! Let them not delay, then, to break themselves of the habit.

In Novices in the vice who are merely occasionally seduced by the example of others, the mania is not deep-seated, and one day's resolution will cure them of their longing. Yesterday they were aprobate to day respectable men, with no further fear of the society of the good. Do not then, ye novices, delay to break yourselves of the habit.

With veteran smokers the task will be difficult. They plead that death will be the consequence of their breaking off the habit; let them, however, consider that a continuance of it will eventually kill them, and their death by the law will follow their apprehension. They are thus sure of meeting their death by one of these means; and supposing that their leaving off the drug should be fatal to them, which is far from being certain, their death would not be dishonorable. Do not then, ye veterans, delay to break off the habit.

You soldiers who enjoy pay, your bodies belong to the army. Your first duty is to preserve your strength for the performance of your military exercises; your next, to save your pay for your families. By indulging in the vice your strength is wasted, your character blasted and your pay squandered; do not delay, then, to cure yourselves of the habit.

I have also thought that, although it is very difficult to warn all by edict, at the same time, yet relations and friends might easily accomplish this, by each warning and advising the other, in the different parishes and streets where there are smokers.

At present friends content themselves with laughing, and fathers and elder brothers although they feel angry at seeing their sons and younger brothers smoking, yet act as though they were blind instead of severely admonishing and forbidding. Some friends shew their resentment by shunning the society of such as smoke; and there are some fathers and elder brothers who will not take the trouble to warn and advise their sons and younger brothers. The laws are now dreadfully severe, and the crime will not escape unpunished: you friends, therefore, who sit quietly by and watch your friends rushing on to their death, without saying a word to warn and admonish, will entail disgrace on your neighborhood; and you fathers and elder brothers who calmly watch your sons and younger brothers walking to their ends, and yet forbear to warn and admonish, are wicked in the highest degree. While every man endeavours to break himself of the habit, do you fathers and elder brothers perform your duty by giving timely admonition and warning.

I now again issue this edict for the purpose of admonishing and instructing all soldiers and people. Instantly break off the vile habit that your lives may be safe; do not continue in the path of vice, lest you be caught in the web of the law.

Let some means be adopted to warn and check. Where there are town halls or ancestral temples let there be meetings held to consult and form regulations. Where there are neither let your superiors be consulted about the adoption of preventive regulations. Let fathers admonish and warn their sons, and elder brothers advise and warn their younger brothers; thus by mutual warnings and advice many may be reclaimed.

The laws are unrelenting and severe and 'tis easy to pass the barrier of life: the path of the opium smoker is dangerous as though it were beset by a raging fire with no outlet for escape. There is but little time for reform; and when overtaken with punishment, you will learn, too late, the magnitude of your former crime; repentance will then avail you nought.

VOL. 4. No. 20. Canton, Saturday, 19th January, 1839. No. 176.

Memorial.

Of Ke-shen Vice-roy of Peche-lee, recommending the Emperor to put a temporary stop to foreign intercourse with China.

I assert it as a fact, that what my country views with feelings of the deepest indignation and pity, is seeing the land overflown with foreign poison, and the people thereof, duped and befooled: and moreover I assert that this evil springs from our holding intercourse with foreigners, no less than from native traitors making light of the Laws!

It now appears that your majesty's minister Hwang Tseo-tsze of the Hung-loo Temple, has duly memorialized, praying your majesty to take it upon yourself alone to decide this important question,* but that your majesty, rather than act upon your own responsibility, has preferred to make due enquiries, and to examine into the circumstances of the case, and has ordered the acting Vice-roys and Fooyunes of every province, to embody their ideas on the subject in duly prepared memorials.

Your Majesty is now fully aware, that what the aforesaid minister recommended cannot be put in force, and you are now looking around you, for some more easy, more feasible plan. The sage plan required, I beg to say, is nothing more than to act on the principle of straightening the stem (that the branches may also be straight) and purifying the fountain (that the stream may also run clear)! And, if it be asked me, how may this be done? I reply, by wise measures defeating the schemes of the foreigners, and having done this, you have merely to bend down their back, and pin them by the collar: support the people of your country with kindness, and the common people, being kindly treated, will not merely have smiling faces, but also grateful hearts: draw the laws tightly around the traitors, and those traitors being thus hemmed in by the net of the law, will lose heart and their spirit will desert them!

I beg the liberty of explaining myself. Let us in the first place take up the subject of our sycee silver leaking out of the country by means of these foreigners, and discuss it. This commodity then is the most valuable production of our inner land. At present the Opium that these foreigners bring is not bartered for other commodities, but exchanged alone for sycee silver. Taking the amount (of Opium sold) during the last 30 or 40 years and adding it up, it comes to several thousand myriad myriads, † (100,000,000,000). These hundreds of thousands of millions of taels, if distributed among the people of our central land, would be no small amount, and here we see it leaking out to the distant foreigners, among whom seven or eight tenths of it remain! I have examined and found, that the several hills we used to have abounding in silver ore, from the time of the Sung dynasty (A. D. 960—1279) the Yuen dynasty (A. D. 1279—1333) the Ming dynasty (A. D. 1368—1644) and until now, have all been utterly exhausted. Only at Ke-nan near Kin-chow, there is a mountain belonging to the Burmese where there is a large mining establishment; and beyond the boundaries of Kwangse, there is the Sung-sing mountain which belongs to Cochinchina where there is another mining establishment. The ore in these mines is very abundant, but as they do not belong to China, the natives are unacquainted with the process of smelting. They only send a merchant (perhaps like one of the Hong-merchants here) to receive the duties, and allow people from China to work them (for their own account). Both places employ annually about 60 or 50 thousand labourers, and the money they annually extract, does not exceed two millions of taels, which they remit to our inner land. It is indeed a most difficult article to be obtained! Now then, we see that the outside foreigners have, in the course of several tens of years, taken away from us more than we could make up again (by means of the two aforementioned mines) in a thousand years, and in return for their most deadly drug, they have been obtaining our most valuable production! It is by reason of this that in it's salt taxes and transit duties, Peking is short 100,000 taels, Keang-nan, Che-keang and other places 100 or 150,000 taels; in Tartary there are only bills or notes, and the Che-foo and Che keen magistrates are late in making their remittances! There is not a department in which the evil is not felt! this is indeed the extreme of knavery and cunning craftiness!

Again, in reference to the foreign money that these said foreigners bring, it is all boiled with, and reduced by quicksilver. If you wrap it up, and put it past for several years without touching it, it will become moths and corroding insects,§ and their silver cups will change into feathers (or wings). Their money is all of this species, and if we leave it for four or five hundred years, I'm sure I don't know what it will change into at last! If you take foreign dollars and weigh them, their weight is 7 mace 3¼ candareens, but on putting them into the crucible, they only yield 6 mace 3 candareens of pure silver, thus on making a calculation we find that they lose 1 mace and 3 cash: what sort of trash can they be made of! Yet we find that in Keang-nan and where the river Hwae runs, (i. e. Honan and Chekeang) and all to the south, these dollars are used in Trade and circulate most abundantly! we even find them at a premium when compared with sycee silver! and this is really what I cannot understand!

Moreover it is a fact, that we Chinese possess a rod of authority with which to chastise the foreigners at all times: and yet so far from using this rod of authority to constrain them, to be bit and duped by them! this is indeed a circumstance to be much lamented! The rod of authority that I allude to, is to be found in the articles Tea and Rhubarb!

Of all the countries that lie to the N. W., Russia is the largest by far, and the people of that country, as well as those of all other foreign countries cannot by any means do without these two articles. The reason of this is, that their climate is rough and rigorous, the sun and wind both fierce and strong; day by day they subsist on beef and mutton; the digestion of this food is not easy; their bowels are bound up, and they speedily die. Therefore it is that every day after meals, they take of this divine medicine (i. e. Tea and Rhubarb) in order to get a motion in their bowels.

The great western Ocean (or Portugal) is distant from our country a hundred thousand Chinese miles (i. e. 30 000 English miles) and these articles are no less necessary to them: England is a little nearer, and they stand equally in need of them. Now however the traitorous merchants of the inner land, covet their woolens and camlets, watches and curiosities in order to make a little profit by them, and thus they carry on trade with them, hoping to realize their expectations. But, little do our merchants know that these foreigners have pondered deeply to provide measures against distant misfortune! They have (in their country) heaped up a supply (of Tea and Rhubarb) for ten or twenty years, so that when prevented from carrying on trade with us they may experience no calamity, and may not have occasion to sit with their hands bound (as it were) waiting patiently for their death: indeed it may be said that their plans are complete in the extreme! Now, altho' I admit both the wealth and the power of these foreigners to be very great: yet in these two important articles alone are they quite at fault. They have wished to buy them in order to plant and grow them themselves, and yet they cannot realize their hopes, the ground and the plant being quite unsuitable:—thus then a kind providence seems to have put the rod into our hands, by which we may curb and restrain these distant foreigners.

My humble view then of the matter is this, that in order to stop the deluge of opium poison that is now over flowing the country, large proclamations should be posted up at the ports and custom-houses, rigidly prohibiting for the meantime intercourse with the foreigners. Let us stop until the opium evil be entirely cut off, which will be several years after this, and the stock that they have on hand will gradually become exhausted, when they will again come before us, with the most abject language, begging and praying for the reopening of their Trade; we may then wait patiently until they have begged us a second and a third time, when we may open to them a side of the net, and, as a proof of extraordinary goodness, permit them to trade with us again. Still, these two aforesaid articles, ere they leave the port must be paid for in sycee Silver, they must neither be bought with (their false) foreign money, nor bartered for commodities; if any man oppose this law, let him suffer one grade less then decapitation (i. e. death by strangling.) Thus, in the course of a few tens of years, the sycee silver that previously went out of our country in payment for opium, will gradually return to us without any difficulty: and in like manner will the spurious foreign money, go back gradually to the places whence it came! This is the real way to ward off the ills of the foreigners by wisdom! this is the sage law that is to hem in the native traitors!

As to stopping the flow of opium poison, by means of killing every person who smokes it, on the principle, that there being now no longer any person to use the drug, no more of the drug will come; thus cutting off the stream, in order to stop up the source: this plan, I say would be imitating the former example of Kaou lew pa (Europe? or Kalapa? i. e. Batavia?) and taking a lesson from the previous wisdom of the Cochin-chinese, without being aware that the circumstances of the case are widely different! Because, at the time that Bombay had intercourse with Cochin-china, the attempt of the people of the former place, to induce those of the latter to smoke, did not succeed; the Cochinchinese having rendered their scheme abortive at the very outset, so at the first prohibition, the evil instantly stopped. It has however been current among us now, for several tens of years, and throughout the whole of the eighteen provinces! how then is it possible, were a similar command now given, that it would have the same effect? Perhaps in the two provinces of Keang nan and Che keang, where the people tremble at the laws and cherish a wholesome dread of punishment—perhaps there, there might be a Chow district or a Heen district that would not dare to disobey, but you could not take these as a rule for the rest! There are for instance the provinces of Hoo kwang, Honan and Sze chuen; in many of the Chow and Heen districts live the Meaou tsze barbarians indiscriminately mixed with our own people; our settlements and their fastnesses are studded in and out, out and in, like a dog's upper and under teeth fast locked, and these Meao tze have never submitted to our laws! Again in Kwang se are the five districts of Kwei lin foo, Lew chow foo, Ping nan foo, Woo chow foo and Tsin chow foo, where the Chwang barbarians (or Chwang koo laou urh) are much more numerous than our own people in the proportion of seven of the former to three of the latter: and at Sew jin, Shih pae and Teen ho they are still more fierce and fiery: if these barbarians smoke opium‖ they will not consent to stoop their heads and be tamely bound, but must assemble in great numbers and give downright battle: and this is a circumstance that we cannot but feel anxious about!

Moreover as regards the people of Fokien, Canton, and all along the coast, these people are accustomed to the use of arms, they have many plans for getting out and coming in, and moreover those among them who smoke opium are very numerous; if these fly off and escape to the little islands of the sea, the foreigners may supply them with food and clothes, and by means of that be continually finding out what is going on among us: and in some barren and secluded parts, when our mandarins, soldiers, and police cannot go by reason of the byepaths, they (the foreigners) may wish to take part with (or form a treaty with) these runaways—and if these assembled brigands once rise, our forts on the land roads would be found were idle contrivances! This causes one still more anxiety than the rebelling of the Chwang barbarians!

As regards the smokers of Opium, these consist of noble and base, rich and poor, worthy men and depraved wretches, good and bad; for those among them who are idle and slothful, stupid and impotent, who work evil and do harm, I have not a word to say. But then those who are the leal-hearted descendants of loyal ancestors! who have worn with honor the civilians' cap and the soldiers' armour! who are imbued with literature and refinement! perhaps rich people who adorn politeness, who give up all for the service of their country, and who take delight in doing good! men whose character is upright, whose conduct is irreproachable! who may be Sew tsae, Keen sang, or Ken jin, and possess the most astonishing talent! or secretaries and clerks in public offices who love justice and act purely! or perhaps the most beautiful, the most refined, the most accomplished of our women! or perhaps virtuous widows, chaste as the icicle itself! down to the husbandman, mechanic and merchant who keep their place and conduct themselves well! if such persons I say, are for the mere whiffing of a pipe of opium to fall into the net of the law, then the clanking of bonds and fetters will be heard in every high way! the prisons will be so crammed as not to leave an inch of space! moreover those who require to take a large quantity of opium to renovate, will not be able to await the reply from the board of punishments (confirming or annulling their sentence) but will die off by thousands and tens of thousands at a time! Now in the instance of a rebellion, when we levy soldiers to exterminate the rebels, when we have "clipped their wings" and massacred their wives and children, it only amounts to a few hundreds or a few thousands of people after all, and there the affair ends! But on the other hand as regards opium smokers, if you wish to annihilate them, let us look at the provinces of Fokien and Canton alone, where, out of every ten men, some seven or eight smoke opium, and I fear that even, should you butcher to death eighty or a hundred thousand people, yet would you be as far from effecting your object as ever! Again, if afterwards you are obliged by circumstances to loosen the severity of the law, then those who have already suffered the awful penalty, have suffered unjustly: if you change it to a new statute, then those whom you now put to death, have been murdered! But the foundations (of the government) of my native country, are laid on benevolence and kindness! we are exceedingly careful in awarding punishment! so much so that even so small a thing as a single life cannot be taken away, without a minute investigation into the circumstances previously, and afterwards the warrant for execution receiving the Imperial rubric: therefore it is that our laws and punishments have now attained a state of perfection that they never had before! In consequence of this, for these last two hundred years, has this country been steeped with the dew of vast prosperity (from your majesty's family occupying the throne) and the line of succession of your majesty's descendants promises to be long: now however by a single word, hurriedly and unadvisedly to convert the whole of your Empire into one vast prison! This I say is what never may be done!

Moreover, the people of the land are your majesty's children. Having received the opium poison from the foreigners, and having been foolishly seduced to smoke it, their property is utterly exhausted, and their very lives are in great danger. Think you, that they do not bitterly repent of their folly? but alas! being deeply sunk with the infection, they have no means of getting rid of it! Again, the holy son of heaven (i. e. your majesty) is the father and mother of the people! You, knowing perfectly the circumstances of the case, should feel compassion for their folly, should pity them struggling in the waters! Your majesty should therefore take this unfortunate people, covered as it were with boils and sores, lift them upon the couch, and point them out the path that leads to a happy old age: how can your majesty ever assume the unbecoming attitude of an executioner, flourishing about your axe, and threatening to butcher your own children, while you contentedly permit the poison-spreading plans of foreigners from afar?

To sum up the whole in one word: the lives of the people must not be looked upon as grass and reeds; the affections of your people must not be alienated from you; the most valuable commodity of the central land must not be permitted to leak out; the outside foreigners must not be permitted to trade with us on such easy terms, and the whole of our sea-coast, must not be so slothfully guarded. Along the whole range of our sea coast, say, Leaou-tung, Pihchelee, Shantung, Keangnan, Chekeang, Fokien, Kwangtung and Kwangsee, we must first place strong garrisons, and have numerous patroles constantly on the alert. At the mouth of every ferry, pass, or creek belonging to the central land we must take like precautions, to make of these as it were our horns of strength, so that the foreigners may not come peeping and spying about: and then we shall have large and clear proclamations, announcing that we do not permit them to hold intercourse with us. Thus then will Opium in the course of time leave off coming; thus will the Hong-merchants no longer be able to act with security; thus will the Opium brokers no longer lurk in their mysterious dens; and thus will no more "fast crabs" or "scrambling dragons" be required for the transport of the drug, which give us so much trouble in the catching. As for the Opium that has already entered the inner land, there is no occasion to take the trouble of seizing and destroying it. As for those who smoke, let them continue to smoke, or let them leave it off, just as they please. After a year or even after half a year, when they know that no more will come, then those who sell it, will seek out some other means of livelihood, and those who smoke it, will take measures to secure their shattered constitutions: thus then by going to work leisurely and without any violent urging of matters, will the whole of the empire be made cheerfully and contentedly to follow after their lawful calling.

This will realize the saying, that the people should be fostered by kindness; and the doctrine of straightening the stem that the branches may likewise be straight, and purifying the fountain that the stream may also run clear, is all contained in these suggestions! By following up these suggestions, we shall rejoice for ten thousand years amid peace and plenty! and will not this be a good plan?

* This is a very remarkable expression. In the original it is, "like Heaven alone violently to decide" or, as Heaven hurls his bolt without consulting any one, so does the minister Hwang Tseo tsze wish your majesty to give forth the edict. This is entirely opposed to the CONSTITUTION of China, the Emperor being bound to consult with the high officers of state before deciding any important public measure, quite as much as our own King or Queen requires in similar cases the consent of both Houses of parliament.

† This is literal: the meaning of course is, that, having the foreigners in your power, you may dictate your own terms.

‡ There is some prodigious mistake here. Even allowing the foreigners to have abstracted every year for the last forty years 10,000,000 taels of sycee (and they have done nothing of the kind) it could only amount to 400,000,000 taels.

§ When one reflects that this nonsense is written by one of the most learned and talented mandarins of China, one might suppose that he was hoaxing the good-natured Emperor, were it not that jokes of that kind would be attended with fatal consequences in China. Is it not possible that the memorialist may have in his possession some mutilated translation of the scriptures? and seeing such passages as Matt: 6 and 19, Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust do corrupt &c. &c. and Prov. 23 and 5, Riches make themselves wings and fly away &c. &c. may have taken them in their literal acceptation?

CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Sir,

About a fortnight ago I had the pleasure to address you in a long letter, wherein I reviewed Capt. Elliot's public character and conduct, down till the day, (unluckies ills?) when the crestfallen British flag was for the fourth or fifth time hoisted in front of the Foreign factories. In that letter I pledged myself to the public to carry on the work I had undertaken, and I now accordingly resume my task. Before commencing this third act however, let me say a few words in my own behalf, as the notice of my hostility to Capt. Elliot seems to be very much misunderstood. I am not "a disappointed opium smuggler" as mentioned by some, neither am I a private and malicious enemy of the Superintendent's as insinuated by others. Quite the contrary. My difference with Capt. Elliot is on public grounds, and on public grounds alone: I repeat, and these public grounds are reduced to one point, viz the manner in which Capt. Elliot has carried on his correspondence with the Chinese authorities, and has compromised (as has thereby made of) the honor and dignity of his country. On this point I declare myself his deadly foe, but neither insidiously, nor maliciously. The charge is made openly, the public press affords weapons of defence quite equal to those of the attack, and if the Superintendent can only shake off the charge of great inconsistency that has been fastened upon him, no one will be more ready, more happy to apologize, than will the "scurrilous writer Britannicus."

The Editor of the Canton Register has drawn a contrast between the public conduct of Lord Napier and that of our present Superintendent, unfavorable to the latter. In this I perfectly coincide. There was an open, manly frankness in every thing which that nobleman said, in every measure which he undertook, which, while many differed with him as to the propriety of his measures, yet commanded the confidence, the respect, the admiration of the whole. Capt. Elliot is exceedingly different from his lordship: he, as a public man, is by no means frank, his manner is by no means confiding, neither does it inspire confidence in it's turn. Lord Napier produced his instructions, and without waiting to be called upon to do so, read them aloud to the assembled public. Capt. Elliot, after having been repeatedly called upon to do the same, either avoids the question, or meets the request with a flat denial. Lord Napier begged for the opinion of the community as to the line of public conduct that he should pursue: Capt. Elliot appears to treat the opinion of the community with the most ineffable contempt. While the latter sits down contentedly and admits the sovereign of his country to be the respectfully submissive tributary of China, Lord Napier hurled a similar insult at the then Viceroy with his open defiance! In one word, while with the one every thing was fair, straight and above board, with the other, every thing seems crooked, inexplicable, and mysterious!

Before proceeding to review Capt. Elliot's late extraordinary correspondence with the Viceroy, I may make an observation or two regarding the circumstances which have brought the said correspondence irregularly before the public eye. Capt. Elliot, in his address to the British Subjects, tells them with the most perfect sang froid, "that he will consider it his duty to promulgate "(as he has always done, and always will) whatever "may concern the interests of her majesty's subjects "should be generally known" This is very singular language to be addressed by their Superintendent to the Canton community! These latter include many gentlemen, in no ways inferior to Capt. Elliot himself, in family, in education, in talent, in property: and I feel sorry to add, that some of those whom he would like to keep in the dark, appear to possess a much higher sense of the honor and dignity of their country, than the man who is purposely paid to uphold the same. Capt. Elliot in this way sets himself up as a kind of political pope: to us his lair babes, he doles out the milk of Chinese diplomacy, while, like his prototype the Holy Father, he insists on reserving the strong meat to himself. The picture assumes a still darker shade, when what Capt. Elliot wanted by a political juggle to get out of the way, has been dragged to the light and found to contain matter as offensive to the feelings of individual Englishmen, as degrading to the country that gave them birth! Why, what scarcity have we that the man who wished to keep us in the dark regarding the real facts of his late correspondence, will act with more candour and openness towards the ignorant minister whose confidence he enjoys? With us his explanation merely amounts to: "I have carried my point! I address the Viceroy "in the same way as does "the Kwang chow foo!" Not a word is said about the very mean way in which this half measure had been obtained: no notice is taken that in order to be able to send home a Kwang chow foo's chop, he had stooped to accept a document which bore in it's face the damning blot, that his own sovereign had been respectfully submissive to the Emperor of China! nor is a syllable breathed than in the granting of that very chop, his own word had been called in question by the Viceroy! And I again ask, what pledge have we that he has been with more explicit to the minister, under whose rule he now holds his appointment? Most likely he may have sent him the same garbled extracts that he has of his generosity supplied us with, handing him up at the same time the stamped and signed Chinese chop? thus rubbing as it were the rim of the cup with honey, that the ill-informed Lord Palmerston may swallow unwittingly, the bitter dregs of the humiliation of his country! Whoever it was that sent Capt. Elliot to publish these said garbled extracts, played not the part of his true friend! I appeal to any or every man of common sense! How much better had the whole of that correspondence been laid before the public under the pen of the highly gifted Morrison, than that such a document as the one which appeared in your last, should meet the public gaze! which document, without wishing to attribute any motive of wilful mistranslator, seems yet too highly colored, and appears to smack strongly of the feeling of party! Again, is Capt. Elliot so ignorant of Chinese politics as not to know, that their mandarins can hold no secret communications with people of other countries? The said document was given by the Viceroy to Capt. Elliot for the express purpose of being communicated, aye, every letter of it, to us for our information and instruction, and if any gentleman doubt the fact, has merely to ask the question of the Viceroy, whether he intends his Edicts to the English superintendent to be looked upon as public or private communications: nay more, if the said applicant will only state the fact, that Capt. Elliot insists upon regarding them in the latter point of view, I make little doubt, that the Viceroy will furnish us with certified copies of the same thro' the Hong merchants.

To proceed with our intended review of Capt. Elliot's correspondence. That gentleman states (I prefer quoting from the Register) "I have just now heard that "officers of the second rank, when addressing your excel-"lency, use the character PIN, petition; a fact of which "my country is still ignorant, therefore I have not la-"tely dared to write to Y. E. &c. &c." This is perhaps one of the most extraordinary assertions recorded in history! In your last or last before leading article a clear distinction was drawn between the characters, Tzu a letter and Pin a petition, and further by the kindness of a friend I am now enabled to lay before the public the definitions of these two important characters, on the high authority of the illustrious and lamented Dr. Morrison. (The numbers point out the characters as arranged in his valuable Syllabic Dictionary, published at Macao 1819)

No. 8,567 PIN. ancient-ly read LIN commonly used to denote a clear statement of any affair made to a superior. PIN, is to state to a superior, whether verbally or by writing: whether petitioning something, or giving information of: whether from the people to an officer of government, or from an inferior officer to a superior several degrees higher &c. &c.

No. 11,340 TSZE. To deliberate &c. &c. Documents which pass between the higher officers of Government, who are nearly equal in a province, are called tsze. Tsze wan, an official document from an equal officer &c. &c.

Now, does Capt. Elliott really mean to tell the public, that after having been in the society of two of the first sinologues of the age, for upwards of four years: after having made more than one attempt to carry on correspondence with the Viceroy as his equal, and, in doing so, sustaining more than one mortifying repulse: after having cudgelled his brains during all that time to find some other or other of communication with the Chinese authorities: and, finally, after having been for some time a student of the language himself: after all this I say, does he really mean to tell us that he has only now made the amazing discovery, that officers of the 2nd rank, when addressing His Excellency, use the character PIN! ! Credat Judaeus Apella! why, granting what he says to be strictly and literally true, it is certainly one of the most singular instances of obtuseness to be met with in the annals of mankind! mark what the Viceroy says in reply.—"The said superintendent "is not devoid of understanding! why then does he evade the question and pretend ignorance, as to the official forms!" But, adds Capt. Elliott, my country is not yet acquainted with the fact! more shame upon you then, and upon the rest of the commission, ery I, that you did not inform them of the fact years ago! For it is a fact that every boy who has dabbled six months in Chinese knows as well, as that an apple is not an oyster, or (as the Spaniards say,) that the moon is not made of ponde horae! If the commission have been as wanting in informing their country of other matters as of this, it is but another lamentable proof, how little they are worth the expense that poor John Bull pays for them! Why, here by their own showing, have they been keeping the two countries in hot water for upwards of four long years, had they but looked into Dr. Morrison's Dictionary under the word pin, they would have found information that might have spared them many a bitter word, and many an anxious thought!

Again the superintendent petitions, "I now earnest-"ly entreat Y. E. to order the Kwang-chow-foo and "the Kwang-chow-hee to combine the writing and cir-"cumstances of this petition (or as C. P. to take up "all the circumstances connected with the writing of "the word or style of petition) in a proclamation to "me, and then I shall be able to send the said procla-"mation to England, which will preserve me from the "censure of H. B. M." I wish that Capt. Elliot for his own sake as well as for our's had said nothing of the kind. This sentence has not only exposed the first personage of our country to the rude remarks of the Chinese mandarins, but brought something very like a sneer upon himself.

Again, "then hereafter I shall be constantly em-"powered to write petitions on public affairs &c." and, "in the constant occurrence of trifling matters I shall "be able to obey in accordance with the former regula-"tion, as the hong-merchants may continue to transmit "your Excellency's orders. &c." To this the Viceroy replies, "I order the Quang chow-foo and Hee under the "peculiar circumstances of the case, to deliver to you a "sealed proclamation, which when you receive it, shall "be your authority. Hereafter in occurrences connect-"ed with common matters, the orders are to be transmit "ted as before thro' the Hong-merchants; this proclama-"tion may not be dragged in as a precedent. &c. &c. The mighty matter then gained after all, is merely a mandarin chop to drive away the boats, and when the work is done, Capt. Elliott takes the same humble part in the train of the Hong-merchants, which he occupied two years ago! Or in other words after the Viceroy has made a convenient tool of him to effect a certain purpose, he puts him aside with contempt! If Capt. Elliott is so fond of getting these chops to send home to his govern-ment, I would beg to suggest to him the propriety of driving away the Lintin ships; were he only to effect this! I could promise him another from the Viceroy, nay perhaps a yellow chop from the Emperor himself!

One more extract, and I have done. Will the unprejudiced reader have the goodness to peruse the following extracts which I have placed vis-a-vis that their discrepancy may be still more apparent.—

Canton Register 8th Jany 1839.—"I desire to put in for-"ce severely coercive measu-"res towards them, but I am "nonplused being without "any clear precedent or in-"structions on which I can "depend, which occasions "me the greatest difficulty to "my management of this "affair &c. &c."

Canton Press 12th Jany. 1839. "If the superintendent wish to compel them but I have no clear instructions (lit luminous document) to hold in my hand, therefore is this business very difficult to take up and transact &c." and will Capt. Elliott have the goodness to explain to the public, whence arises this very awkward contradiction?

To those who have done me the honor to read over this and my former letter carefully, I beg to submit the following idea of what I consider Capt. Elliot's instruction to be and to have been. Of course in this respect every man has perfect right to think for himself, and either adopt these opinions, or let them alone as he sees fit. It is certainly a very curious proceeding that a private individual, "should take up and unite circum-"stances" to get at the orders given by government to the Superintendent, when every thing would be much more plain, more clearly known, would he only condescend to explain the matter himself.

1st. When Capt. Elliot petitioned the Chinese government to come up, and did come up here in April 1837, I believe he did it without any orders whatever. Had he been so commanded, he could not have retired as he did on the 1st of December of the same year.

2dly. Altho' not ordered to come up here, yet I believe that the British Government approved of the act, such is of course represented home in the most favorable view possible.

3dly. That when he hauled his flag down 1st December, he did so equally without orders. The British Government's approval or disapproval of Capt. Elliot's previous conduct, could hardly be in his possession in the end of November 1837;—and in the public documents we have seen, and in the reports of debates in parliament, there is not the slightest allusion to any such orders.

4thly. That not long after he had hauled down his flag, he received letters from government strongly approving of his previous conduct in having opened up a communication with the Chinese government upon any terms, which accounts for the feverish anxiety which he manifested in all lest year to renew the intercourse, and,

Lastly, that on the 8th December he received letters from home, strongly condemning his rash measure in hauling down his flag. What the orders are, I am unable precisely to state, most likely telling him to address the Chinese Government on the same footing as do the consuls of other nations.

Thus then I believe that at this moment Capt. Elliot has instructions to communicate with the Viceroy of Canton by petition or otherwise, but they are probably couched in such strong terms of rebuke that he does not like to show them. Having received such instructions, he of course has most ardent wish to renew the intercourse, and accordingly we find him very ardroitly making use of the riot of the 12th December, as a plea for being forced to petition the Viceroy! But any man who will take the trouble to go over the correspondence carefully, will observe, from it's tenor, that he felt most anxious to hold intercourse upon any terms, and that the riot &c. &c., were merely used as a stalking-horse. Had it been otherwise, he required to petition the Viceroy just as much as he chose to publish it, and no more. What then becomes of the secret article, the latter part of his petition to the Viceroy? Of course that part also where he speaks of being afraid of the anger of his sovereign for opening the communication again by means of a petition, is mere diplomatic coquetry, and nothing else.

Next comes the important question: having reestablished his communication with the Chinese government, what plan does he intend to adopt in reference to the opium ships or Lintin fleet? The Viceroy called upon him once before to drive them away, and most probably will do so again. On the previous occasion Capt. Elliot tried to evade the question, and in doing so, got floored. Has he since that time learned any new excuse or evasion? or is he merely going to argue in a circle, to hew round the ring as it were with His Excellency? Our Superintendent really seems to have burnt out every "slough of despond" to plunge himself into with his eyes open!

For the liberty I have taken in reviewing the public measures and the public character of our Superintendent, I have no apology to offer. To canvass such measures, to examine such character, is the right, nay, is the duty of every free-born Englishman! If it be objected that such inquiry, such peeping behind the curtain, is such stirring into his nest exceedingly rude and ill-bred, I have merely to reply, that in our native country there is such a rule thing as a CONSTITUTION, which imposes very ill-bred restraints upon the THRONE itself! Nay, more, there is a still more unmannerly thing called a FREE PRESS, which like another Argus, watches these ill-bred restraints with the utmost jealousy! This said Free Press will not take for granted the word of the highest lord of the land, but is continually calling for documents and for evidence, and his craving, like that of the horse-leech in scripture, is very difficult to satisfy.

To the two parties which compose the community of Canton, I have just a word to say, before I take leave. To those who are perfectly satisfied with Capt. Elliot's mere ipse dixit, and content to be governed by him more pecudum, I would say, I wish you joy, for under the circumstances of the case, I think the governor and the governed exceedingly well matched. To those who are not content with Capt. Elliot's mere word, but wish to know a reason for every thing that he does, and to see a voucher for every transaction that passes thro' his hands (and the writer of this is one of those) I say, let us never rest, till we have his orders, his instructions laid before us, clear and distinct as the sun at noon-day, and, moreover let us take good heed, that no more secret correspondence, such as that just reviewed, pass between the English superintendent and the Chinese Viceroy.

I also take my leave of Capt. Elliot for the present, more in pity than in anger. I look upon him (to quote again from our great poet) as an instance of,

Vaulting ambition which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other side!

Besides being a man of good intentions, I look upon Capt. Elliot as a man of considerable ability, or what is commonly called a clever man. But on the other hand, I boldly assert that he is deficient in a much more sterling commodity, and one that would have befriended him amid the trying circumstances he has been placed in much more than mere off-hand cleverness, and that is, plain practical, sound, common-sense. In this point of view I cannot consider Capt. Elliot as the most proper person to hold the situation which he now fills. Indeed I cannot better sum up the whole, than by borrowing the clever but homely similie of an able London paper, he is "like one of those dandy whips, who are continu-"ally driving the vehicle of the state into every rut and "ditch, in order to show with what tact they can right "themselves again: Whereas, the duty of the profess-"ed coachman is, to look ahead for these obstructions, "and seize them, to AVOID them!"

Yours,
BRITANNICUS.

Saturday, 19th Jany.

Below will be found a communication from the Hong merchants to the Chamber of Commerce containing the proposal of some regulations, to be adopted in future with regard to the shipping at Whampoa, to prevent the smuggling there of opium and Sycee. The regulations now proposed are less objectionable than those made by the Cohong in a paper dated 10th January, also addressed to the Chamber, and by that body refused to be received, and which were nearly to the following effect: "That if any vessel at Whampoa be convicted of having smuggled opium or Sycee she was to be broken up, or disposed of by sale after which she must leave the port directly. In case of any smuggled goods being discovered, these are to be confiscated and their owner to be mulcted in double their value. If vessels be found to smuggle by means of decked boats, these boats are to be broken up. If any vessel's trade has been stopped on account of smuggling, and be driven out of port, she must nevertheless pay the port charges. If payment of such fines or port charges be refused by either captain or consignee, then the Hong merchants are to pay themselves by retaining property to the amount mulcted of any, any one of their body may at the time have in his hands belonging to these parties. Moreover, if a vessel, to evade the fines should, without permission, leave the port and go to sea, she is to be fired at from the Bogue forts."

From the proposal made at present it will be seen that the vessel is no longer liable to seizure, but to a fine of $20,000, the smuggled goods to be confiscated and their owner to be mulcted only half their value instead of double, and that fines as well as the value of confiscated goods are to go towards the fund for paying insolvent Hong merchants debts. The trade though partially opened on the first of this month, was not completely so until last Tuesday, till when the Hong merchants refused to secure any newly arrived ships; but seeing that they could not hold out against the repeated petitions to the Viceroy for the unconditional opening of the trade, they at last consented to carry it on at present on the old footing, merely requiring from every consignee and commander a signed declaration that there was no opium on board of their ship, nor should there be smuggling of opium or Sycee on board of her whilst at Whampoa be permitted. For the future however they require a bond containing the regulations above referred to, whereby the consignee would bind himself in a penalty of $20,000. for smuggling, from a ship to his consignment. We should think that such bond cannot be given, as it would expose parties to false accusations, which in China are so rife whereever any thing is to be got by such. Besides, it seems to be quite sufficient to know that such is the penalty for transgressing the custom-laws, without giving a bond to that effect, nor do we see that such bond would do any good to Hong merchants. Let them, or the Hoppo's people be watchful, and, in case of detection, inflict the punishment awarded by these regulations; they have the means to do so; why expect of the accused self-condemnation?

We think it perpectly right that the degree of punishment for smuggling Opium or Sycee should be defined, and that such punishment should fall all on the offender alone, and not as it has done recently on both quilty and innocent, by stopping the whole trade, for if that is again resorted to in similar cases this trade will become one of the most uncertain in the world, and interests of immense amount daily perilled by parties who besides smuggling in Opium may have nothing to lose in Canton.

We publish a proclamation from the Namhoy yun to counteract the fears of the people about the searching of houses for Opium The feeling among the people against the police runners and soldiers seems to be very strong, and their suspicion of their honesty universal. In various parts of the suburbs, among others, on the bridge at the back of the Creek-hong, gates have been erected to prevent the police from entering without being previously searched—in fact no soldier is allowed to enter a house without being previously divested of all articles of dress save his shirt and trowsers, that he may not have Opium concealed about him, by means of which to denounce parties. On leaving the house he is again searched that he may not have stolen any thing. In some parts of this province the people have openly bid defiance to the mandarins, and the magistrate of the town of Choochou-fuh has withdrawn to Canton seeing his authority despised, whilst the people inscribe on their shop-doors "smoking dirt sold here." The Govern. or does not however seem to relax in his severe measures against dealers and smokers, and for some days past offenders in gangs of about forty (altogether it is said about 300 men) with iron shackles, some round their necks, others on both necks and feet, have been paraded through the various districts of the town. Many of these were well dressed people, and of respectable stations in life.

The Hong-merchants have also addressed a communication to the Chamber of Commerce, containing an edict from the Vice-roy against the outside shipping. this having been occasioned by a report from some naval officer, of a small foreign vessel engaged in the Opium- trade having been seen near Tien-pac. We do not publish the document itself as it is merely a repetition of many former similar ones.

The Cohong paid on Monday last the 14th instant the first instalment on the debt of the Kingqua Hong, of $ per cent.

We intended to have offered a few remarks on the very remarkable document, the memorial from the Viceroy of Pe che lee to the Emperor, as well as on Britannicus' letter, but find that we have no space for them.

It was with much pleasure we noticed in the second report of the Morrison Education Society just published the following passage:

"While the above pages were passing through the "press, the Trustees met, and appointed a Committee, "composed of gentlemen then residing at Macao, to inquire "into the state of the school there under Mrs. Gutzlaff's "management, with reference particularly to the last of "the above resolutions. By the report of this Committee "it appears:—That the present state of the school, as "regards its management and the progress of the scholars, "is very satisfactory: That the rumors, adverted to at "the general meeting, of the mode of procuring scholars, "or of obtaining blind children for instruction, appear to "have been greatly exaggerated; that at any rate Mr. "and Mrs. Gutzlaff seem to have been influenced, in the "measures which gave rise to such rumors, by the most "praiseworthy motives: That these measures having, "however, laid them open to misrepresentation, and being "calculated to have an unfavorable tendency, Mr. Gutz-"laff has given the fullest assurance, that they shall be "wholly discontinued. The Trustees under these circum-"stances feel justified in continuing the monthly contri-"bution, and have tendered it accordingly."

HAN, Kwang-chow Hee, and LEW, Namhoy-yuen, issue a perspicuous proclamation.

We have lately heard that the shopkeepers and inhabitants having listened to, and believed, idle reports that the police were about to search every house for Opium, because greatly alarmed and at the beat of a gong, assembled in the temples, in great numbers, to consult upon the affair.

The Opium law has long been prohibited by the laws, but recently the imperial orders have been dreadfully severe, commanding all offenders to be apprehended and visited with the heaviest punishment. Yet, what reason is there for supposing that every house in the city, whose lands are so broad and inhabitants so many, will be searched? If you are really virtuous people, quietly carrying on your business and obeying the laws, neither daily smoking, nor selling the drug for the sake of gain, why so scared?

You, who smoke or sell Opium, remember that the laws are ready, and repent of your crime. Instantly destroy all your crude and prepared Opium with the smoking pipes and other apparatus. If you deliver all these up to your magistrates, they will see that you are determined to reform, and we promise, will not punish your former error. But if you obstinately pursue your wicked courses, immediately proof is obtained, you will be apprehended; and your bodies being caught in the net of the law, repentance will be too late.

You must all know that the law forbids the assembling of a mob by beat of gong. Even on the high seas it is illegal, those therefore who do so in a large city, are truly rash and daring. We now issue a perspicuous Edict for the purpose of instructing our people in this matter. You shopkeepers and inhabitants of the several streets must all quietly obey the laws: do not rashly commit yourselves. If any idle and quarrelsome blackguards should attempt under guise of policemen, to search your houses, bind them and deliver them over to your magistrates, who will verily punish them with the greatest severity. We, your magistrates, on obtaining clear proof against Opium dealers, will send proper Officers and soldiers to search and apprehend, but we will not permit them to distress the innocent people. Do not then listen to idle reports, nor frighten yourselves.

If after this notice any one dare to assemble mobs, by beat of gong, in open defiance of the Imperial commands, the ringleaders will be apprehended and punished according to law.

Let all implicatly obey. Do not oppose our commands.

Taoukwang 18th year, 11th moon, 24th day. Let this perspicuous proclamation be suspended.

To the Honorable the Chamber of Commerce
&c. &c. &c.

A respectful communication.

Having lately received the strictest orders from Government against (dealing in) Opium and Sycee Silver, we resolved not to secure those vessels which have recently arrived unless some new terms were agreed to; but the objection raised by you several gentlemen, against them (that you have not yet had time to inform your employers, and the owners of vessels and cargo in your countries of these new plans for conducting business) are reasonable.

We now beg to send you a Copy of new regulations, which we request your Honourable Chamber will publish in the Newspapers for the information of the several gentlemen of your noble countries, that they may write to inform their employers and the owners of vessels and cargo, that next year all vessels coming to Canton will be managed according to the new regulations.

In the meantime those vessels which have lately arrived shall be managed in the old way: but the Masters and Consignees must really exert themselves to prevent their vessels bringing Opium or other contraband articles into port, or smuggling Sycee Silver out, that the harmony of the trade may be preserved.

Sincerely hoping (that you will agree to the request) which we now write, to make. We remain, with compliments, &c. &c.

The Hong-merchants.

January 16th, 1839

We have most respectfully to offer up for your lightning glance a list of terms for securing ships to be agreed to and the bond to be given as proof.

"Should any vessel at Whampoa bring up Opium or smuggle out Sycee, the trade of such vessel will, on a discovery and seizure being made, be instantly stopped, and she be driven out of the Port without a moment's delay. (Her owner) will be mulcted in $ 20,000 to be appropriated to the liquidation of the foreign claims.

"Should any vessel at Whampoa engage in smuggling any other kind of goods, her trade will, on a discovery and seizure being made, be instantly stopped: The smuggled goods will be sold, the proceeds confiscated, and the owner mulcted in half their value, to be appropriated to the liquidation of the foreign claims.

"No vessel at Whampoa must employ decked boats on penalty of her trade being stopped immediately the fact is discovered. On the boat being given up to our Chamber for destruction, we will petition that her trade may again be opened.

"The master and consignee of any vessel condemned to leave the port for her misbehaviour, must nevertheless pay up her Port charges; they must not on the plea of the ship being driven out, endeavour to evade the payment, on penalty of the most rigorous prosecution.

"Should the Captain and Consignee of any vessels demur paying any just mulct, their security merchant must inform the other merchants thereof, who will deduct the amount from the prices of any goods belonging to the parties.

"The boud to be worded as follows:—" A bond given as proof: We (A) master, and (B) consignee of the (flag) Ship (name) which has come from the port with a cargo of (C) to trade at Canton, do hereby guaranty that she has no Opium or other prohibited goods on board. Should she have decked boats she shall not employ them in smuggling out Sycee, or other goods; but should any such doings be discovered, we will cheerfully submit to be dealt with according to the regulations which we dare not endeavor to evade. In witness whereof we have signed our names to this bond to be held by you as proof."

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

Arrangements have at length been made by the Hong merchants for securing all the ships at present in port on a guarantee merely that the vessel neither has nor shall have while in the river, Opium or Sycee silver on board But they have given the foreign community to understand that they will secure no ships the next season without receiving bonds to that effect with a heavy penalty to be applied to the payment of foreign claims. but such penalty not to relieve the vessel or those connected with it from such measures as the Government may take for a breach of the regulations of the port. The trade of the port is therefore going on again, but there is a general depression in all articles of import, which is likely to continue for sometime as the Chinese holy-days will soon commence.

IMPORTS.

Cotton goods.—The only sale of Longcloths is of a few hundred pieces of white of fair quality at about 4½—this description cannot be quoted higher than 4 @ 4½, and Greys 3½ @ 4. Camlets are nearly unsaleable. Cotton yarn is nearly unsaleable nor is there much chance of improvement for sometime. The stock is very heavy particularly of middling and inferior quality.

Woollens.—No sale of Spanish Stripes to report, but the offers are fully 5 cents under previous quotations. Longells. A resale of about 1300 Pieces was made yesterday, of good quality under 8's, which may be considered the market rate, and without demand. There must be nearly 40,000 Pieces in the ships now at Whampoa.

Metals.—Lead is quoted rather lower but without transactions. Iron small rod remains nearly the same, but bar has advanced from $ ½ @ ¾.

Straits Produce.—Pepper is dull of sale at our quotations, although the stock is not heavy. Betelnut from the moderate supply and all nearly in the hand may be quoted at 4 @ 4½. About 1000 piculs were sold a day or two since at 4,90. Rattans as before.

Rice.—Without alteration. The prohibition to the export from Manila having as yet no influence.

Cotton.—There have only been one or two trifling sales during the week at a decline on former rates. particularly in Madras and Bombay; the dealers being large holders of Bengal, attempted to support the price of that staple, and made one or two purchases at advanced rates in the expectation that the ships would be prevented discharging for some time. It has however again receded.

Opium.—There is nothing whatever doing in this market and the last accounts from the East-coast are very unfavorable. The seizures are still going on, but the domiciliary visits of the Police were so oppresive that the people were becoming roused, and the authorities have been compelled to discontinue them, except on positive information. The Lintin deliveries too strongly exhibit the state of the trade, having been to the 8th inst. only 8 chests of Benares.

EXPORTS.

Nankin Silk.—No price yet fixed, and no exports. The quantity here including the old is about 4000 bales. The silk men are not yet talking of less than 560 @ 600, and we hear of no offers higher than 500 @ 520.

Exchanges.—Money very scarce, and exchange on England and India has advanced to our quotations.

Tea.—The resistance of the tea-men which we noticed in our last as governing the market for Congou Teas has within the last day or two been less determined, and many chops have been settled at our quotations. In green Tea there is no business yet doing, although negotiations for cargo Skin have been for some days carried on. Cargo per Wm. Jardine for London: Congou 2521, Caper 21, Souchong 622, Campoy 36, Hongmuy 11, Pekoe 492, Orange Pekoe 773, Gunpowder 7, Imperial 7, Total 4495 Piculs.

VOL. 4. No. 21. Canton, Saturday, 26th January, 1839. No. 177.

We happened to meet with a voyage to the East Indies including China in 1747 - 1748, Written by an English officer on board an East India man; and as this work contains many interesting remarks, we shall quote some of them for the edification of our readers.

"The English Factories are situated in one of the best streets in town. They are very large, have a number of courts, halls and warehouses, with convenient rooms for lodging a great number of people. One large gate opens to the streets, and another to the water, where our boats load and unload. At each gate a sentinel is kept day and night. There is also a petty officer appointed, to see the sentinels duly relieved, and the porters or coolies do their duty; to take an account of all goods that come into, or go out of the factories; to prepare rooms for the officers and people, when they come to reside some little time in the factory; to entertain the officers and men; and, in a word, to see that every thing is kept in order.

All the officers and men are allowed a certain time to reside and do business in Canton, according to their station, which they do by turns. In the factory, where I was there, I have seen sixty people entertained at once. As we were in all eight ships from England, four ships companies were in the largest factory, three in another; and one company in a smaller one.

Every morning we were attended with a levee of Chinese merchants, brokers and tradesmen, inquiring if we wanted any thing in their way. On these occasions, they are exceeding complaisant, are sure to give you particular directions to their houses, to extol their goods, and invite you to tea with them, of which they are very liberal. When you visit them, they give you samples of such goods as they have to dispose of, that you may carry them to the factory, and shew them to your friends. I have known some of the common sailors go about in order to procure samples of tea, rhubarb, and other goods, till they had ingrossed a good quantity, and yet not purchase a sixpenny worth from any one."

"A little below the town of Whampoa which is about twelve or fourteen miles below Canton, there is a large field of rice, interspersed with rising grounds, which is generally overflowed at high water; where the European ships commonly bargain with a compradore or sutler, to furnish them with victuals and other necessaries during their stay. These people build a house for each ship: on one of those pieces of rising ground close by the water-edge. They are called by us banksalls. In these we dispose the rigging and yards of the vessel, chests, watercasks, and every thing that incommodes us aboard. In these also we kill fresh provisions, and perform every other business that cannot be done so conveniently aboard. Each banksall is guarded by a number of the ship's company, well armed, day and night, who are under the command of a mate or midshipman, called the captain of the banksall. This officer ought to be very alert in placing the centinels, in taking particular care to prevent them from sleeping, and that no post is left vacant; for otherwise the banksall may be robbed by a wild and thievish people, who are always lurking about them in boats, or in the paddy or riceground, watching an opportunity. These often make bold and impudent attempts to plunder them. I knew an instance of their getting into the backdoor of the banksall, by crawling on all fours among a parcel of hogs, which got about the swamps or paddy ground, and carrying away brass kettles, pieces of meat, and any trifles they could get at. Nay, they will even steal before your face, when they see a probability of getting away before you can lay hold of them. During our stay, they were once bold enough to take the musket out of a centinel's hand, when he was a little drousy, and to present it at him, which soon made him retire, and gave them an opportunity of stealing.

Our people at first believed, that we might give upon any Chinese who appeared about our banksalls after ten at night. But an accident soon happened, which convinced us we were mistaken. One evening a centinel at Danish banksall fired at one of these thieves as he was approaching, and shot him dead. His accomplices immediately fled to their boats, or the riceground; and the dead body lay for several days before the banksall, without the least notice being taken of it. At last the mandarine of that district, who had made a report of the affair to the authorities, caused a box to be made for the dead body, into which it was put, and ordered it to be before the Danish banksall several days more. This affair created a great misunderstanding between the Danes and the Mandarines who exorcising demanded the delinquent to be delivered up, which the Danes were forced to comply with. I left Canton before the affair was concluded; but am since informed that the Mandarines restored him to the Danes the year following."

Our writer makes also mention of Mr. Flint.

"Mr. James Flint, an Englishman, who has resided at Canton since he was a boy, and who acts as the company's agent there, for which he has 90 tael allowed him from every ship, speaks the Chinese language, is acquainted with all their customs, and, when no English ships are at that port, he dresses in the Chinese manner, and wears a long lock of hair like a native. He is yet no very old man, and I believe is now more of a Chinese than an Englishman. His chief employment is to be subservient to the supercargoes, in interpreting; but it is observed, that he is under such awe of the Chinese Mandarines, or so much a Chinese himself, that he cannot assume that native boldness or bravery peculiar to a Briton, in defending the rights or demanding justice for his countrymen.—When we were there, he dressed after the English fashion, and resided in the English factory, attended by a Chinese servant.

As soon as the European ships come to an anchor at Whampoa, a couple of Hoppo or custom house boats, are placed on each side of them, to see that nothing is smuggled out of or into the ship. They search every chest, that they suspect, and sometime even our pockets don't escape them. Yet I have seen many small things carried aboard without their notice; such as gongs, bows, arrows, and other things that are strictly prohibited to be exported; and sometimes the Chinese themselves assist our people in bringing them on board.

"We have already observed, that all boats, whether our own or those of the Chinese, that go from aboard, bound for the factory, must have a chop or permit from a custom house officer; which must be renewed at every custom house in their way. There are three Hoppo or custom houses between Whampoa and Canton, situated by the river side, distinguished by having the emperor's yellow colours hoisted upon a long pole before the door. The boat must call at each of these Hoppo houses, to renew the chop; the ship's pinnace, however, or other boat, having a captain or supercargo aboard, is allowed to pass without being obliged to stop at any of these Hoppo houses.

After the supercargoes have agreed with the Hoppo with regard to the duty, and with the merchants about the prices of goods aboard, and what kinds of Chinese goods are wanted to load with; then the custom house retinue come aboard, measure the ship, and weigh and take an account of all the goods, which are immediately sent up to the factory, or to the merchant's house who purchases them, in a large sampan."

Our author makes the following remarks respecting the duties.

"It is absolutely necessary for every ship bound to Canton, to settle preliminaries with the Hoppos, or commissioners of the customs, before they go far up the river, or at least before they begin to unload any goods, otherwise they will be most intolerably imposed upon. And it is dangerous in consequence to let the Chinese know the full value of the ship's cargo; at least, it is necessary to conceal part of the bullion."

Of Chinese merchandize:

"The gains in a China voyage chiefly arise from the goods imported from China, and not from what are carried thither. We buy the most part of their goods with silver.—Lead is almost the only commodity for which our merchants get more than prime cost. We carry also scarlets, blue, black, green and yellow broad cloths thither. But the remnants or small pieces which we get cheap in England, turn more to account, than whole pieces. Of these small pieces the Chinese make long purses which hang by their side, tied by silken strings to their girdle.

The following goods turn also to pretty good account, if they can be conveyed ashore without paying the duties, otherwise the charge and trouble will be equal to the profit viz.

Coral branches,
Flint ware for shamshuecups.
Old wearing apparel of scarlet or blue cloth,
Sword blades about 14s. per dozen,
Spectacles set in horn, about 8s. 6d. per dozen,
Clocks and watches of small price,
Small brass tweezer cases,
Any new toy not before imported,

Goods imported from China, are teas, porcelaine, quicksilver, vermillion, and other fine colours; China root, raw and wrought silks, copper in bars, of the size of sticks of sealing wax, camphire, sugar candy, fans, pictures, lacquered ware; soy, borax, lapis lazuli, galingal, rhubarb, coloured stones, putanague, i. e a sort of tin; gold, with many things made of mother of pearl.

Green tea is drank in India, Persia, and all the eastern nations; bohea is little esteemed by them, single or green tea is to be chosen by its fine smell, and light colour; for it any of the leaves appear brownish or withered, it is not good. Imperial or Bing tea is still lighter than green tea, of a pleasant smell, but not so strong as single. If it once lose its crispiness, it is good for little; which it will do, though very fresh and good when bought, if great care is not taken in packing it.

Altho' the exportation of gold be prohibited, the Mandarins themselves sell it in a concealed way, to the European merchants. Ten tael weight of gold, touch 22, bought at touch for touch, (the most governing price) amounts to 111 oz. 8 dwt. 5 gr. current. Ten tael of silver, at 3s. 6d. per oz. is £ 30 12s. 8d. for which you have 12 oz. 2 dwt. 4 gr., worth about 41, as money in London, is £ 43 6s. 8d. and makes upwards of 50 per cent profit. But gold is a commodity that is seldom bought there by any but those who have more money to lay out then they have either room or privilege in the ship, which seldom happens. There are a great many sorts of goods on which they may make 5 or 600 per Cent if got ashore in London without paying duty, and sold to proper hands.

A great deal depends on a person's knowledge of what things are likely to take in England, and at what price they are commonly sold. If a private trader would improve such a voyage to advantage, he should consult with the hardware, china, or toy merchants in London, before he goes, and should carry with him patterns or musters by which things may be made or painted in China, for the Chinese workmen of all professions are so ingenious, that they will imitate any thing that is shown them to the greatest perfection and exactness.

Price of goods sold at Canton by the English Company, 1747-8.

Lead per pecul of 133 lb. from three tael to three tael six mace.
Scarlet cloth per cattie, of 20 oz. Avoirdupois from three tael to four tael.
Slips of ditto, three tael to three tael five mace.
Looking glasses per square foot, from one tael five mace to two tael.

Prices of Indian goods carried from Batavia and sold Canton.

Pepper per pecul of 133 lbs. from eigt tael to ten tael.
Beeswax per ditto from twelve tael to fourteen tael.
False amber per ditto at twelve tael.
Fine amber per ditto from one hunderd tael to one hundered and ten tael.
Rorin allas per ditto at sixty tael.
Block tin at eleven tael.
Patchuck at twenty two tael.
Birds nests per cattie, of 20 oz. from two tael five Mace, to three tael.

Prices of goods bought at Canton by the English Company, anno 1747-8.

Bohea Teas.

Common bohea per pecul of 133 lb. from thirteen tael to fifteen tael.
Cargo from twenty five tael to thirty tael.
Suchong from thirty five tael to seventy tael.

Green Teas.

First Singlo at thirty tael.
Second ditto at twenty five tael.
Third ditto at twenty two tael,
Fourth ditto at sixteen tael.
Best hyson at sixty tael.
Second hyson at forty five tael.
Hyson gobi at sixty ix tael.

Other Teas.

Uchang at forty tael.
Imperial at thirty tael.
Rhubarb root from eleven tael to twenty eight tael.

The porcelaine or China is so various in quality and fashion, that it is impossible to fix a price. I have seen exquisitely fine enameled work, which, I believe, would bring more profit that teas, or the China ware which takes up a great deal of room, and is liable sometimes to suffer great damage. These enameled vessels must be smuggled from Canton to the ships; for the duty on all metals there is as much as the prime cost, and amounts almost to a prohibition of the exportation of them.

The following translation from the original placard in Hor lane in the Chinese language (we are told) has been sent to us for the wider spreading the fame of Warren's manufacture.

ADVERTISEMENT.

We noticed last night in the "Peking Gazette"
An edict respecting a bottle of Jet.
The Emperor commands (at a censor's suggestion.)
The Viceroy to answer the following question:
Whe maketh this Ink? Is he sprung from old Han?
Doet the flowery kingdome gire birth to the man?
Or is he a demon come thousands of miles,
To drink my compassion, and feed on my smiles"?
The Viceroy replies "at your holy command"
I, your slave, instituted a search thro' the land,
When no native appearing to enter his claims,
I discovered the maker was not of these realms;
A linguist reports that of all in the West,
The red bristled-demons make blacking the best.
And I find that the Jet which most fame doth command,
Is made by Ah. Wa keen of 30 the Strand!

This easy shining and brilliant blacking prepared only by R Warren No. 30 Strand London, and sold by his Agent Old Jemmy good Tom, No. 30 Hog lane.

ART. III. First report of the Medical Missionary Society's Hospital at Macao, for the quarterly term beginning 5th July, and ending 1st October, 1838. By the Rev P PARKER, M. D.

In accordance with a desire expressed at a general meeting of the Society in May last, the Hospital at Macao was opened on the 5th of July. Previous engagements to return to Canton, and the absence of any other medical gentleman to take charge of the establishment, rendered it necessary temporarily to close it on the 1st of October. It is with great pleasure that the report for the term is now submitted to the Society and its friends.

Often has the sincerest gratitude been felt towards the benevolent members of this Society, who have procured such an asylum for the afflicted Chinese, and to the respected President by whose judgment the spot was selected, when,—walking through its capacious and numerous apartments,—I have witnessed the comfortable accommodation afforded to the inmates, to many of whom it seemed almost a palace, in comparison with the narrow cells which they call their homes. The building is capable of accommodating two hundred patients. It has nineteen spacious rooms on the second story, well ventilated; and an extensive corresponding ones on the ground floor; a garden, and extensive compound, with three wells of water—in the rear; and a yard in front. The building is of brick, strongly built; and the whole of the ground (say a third of an acre) belonging to it, is surrounded by a substantial wall. It is in a healthy locality, overlooking the inner harbor, and has good access both by land and water.

It is delightful to contemplate the yearly augmenting relief that may here be afforded to the suffering Chinese. It is cheering and encouraging to regard the facilities that here exist, for the instruction of the young men of China in the principles of rational medicine and surgery. May the institution prosper every way—may there be no lack of men to conduct its operations, or of means to support and increase its usefulness—may it be the fruitful parent of many like institutions, under the conduct of Chinese, who shall have acquired the skill and science of the west, and shall have imbibed the benevolence and purity of the gospel.

Seven hundred patients were received into the Hospital during the term, towards the close of which many had to be sent away, from the inexpedience of receiving them for a few days only. Fewer important surgical cases presented themselves, in proportion to the whole number, than had previously been the case at Canton. With a few exceptions, the task of gaining the confidence of the people had to be commenced de novo. The suspicion and reserve at first manifested were greater than ever at Canton. The arrival, however, as patients, of gentlemen from Canton, and occasional visits of some who had been cured there, and of others personally acquainted with previous operations, tended very much to alter the feelings of the people. An unexpected auxiliary in effecting this change was found, too, in sundry of their idols, who, according to the interpretation of the Chinese priests, encouraged a large number of their votaries to apply to the foreign physician with assurance of success.—Chinese Repository for December.

3. "The lo or mule," says Le Shechin, "is larger than an ass and stronger than a horse, its strength lies in its loins. In its rump, there is a locked bone that cannot be opened, which prevents it bearing young and suckling them." The Chinese have crossed the breeds of domestic animals, and produced mules unknown to us. "There are five sorts of mules: an ass and a mare produce a lo or mule; the offspring of a horse and she-ass is a kuě le; that of a jackass and cow is a to mih; of a bull and she-ass is tuh tsung; and that from a bull and mare is called hen hen; but vulgarly all are called lo or mules." This animal is not often seen in this part of the empire, but both it and asses are said to be common in the middle and northern provinces. In the Spring and Autumn Record it is related, "that Chaou Heentsze had a white mule which he highly prized; once on a time his minister fell sick, and the doctor said, if he eats the liver of a white mule he will recover; otherwise he will die. The prince hearing of this said, 'to kill an animal in order to save a man will surely by benevolent?' He accordingly killed his mule, and took out the liver, which when the sick man had eaten, cured him." Ibid Notices of Natural history, selected from Chinese authors.

Vaccine Institution.

The following is the last report from the National Vaccine Establishment, addressed to Lord John Russell, as Secretary of State for the Home Department:—

"The amount of deaths by small-pox this year, within the bills of mortality, has been less than in any former one since vaccination was first promulgated; but we are sorry to say, that the disease has prevailed with its usual mortality in several parts of the country. The apathy under which some thoughtless people wait until danger from small-pox be at their very door, the unreasonable distrust of others of the protective power of vaccination (notwithstanding the satisfactory experience of more than 40 years over millions of mankind), and the artful schemes of unworthy inoculators who avail themselves of such ill grounded fears—all these circumstances contribute to countenance and to keep up the practice of inoculation, by which a perpetual source of contagion is supplied to the great danger of those who have not already had the disease, or have not been vaccinated properly. A notion has been entertained by not a few, that the vaccine matter has lost its influence by time; but this is not supported by analogy of any other poison. The virus of small-pox itself has lost nothing of its force in the course of 900 years; and we are enabled to state a strong fact, with perfect confidence, in proof of the efficacy of the vaccine matter at present, viz., that of more than 70,000 vaccinated in descent with successive portions of the matter originally collected by Dr. Jenner 38 years ago, vaccination has manifested its peculiar influence in all; though of this number some hundreds have been subjected to the severest trials by exposure to small-pox in its most fatal form. No, it has not worn out its protecting property. The rarity of an example of disfigurement by small-pox now, to be found in the theatres, in churches, or any large assemblage of the people, affords some proof this; but unfortunately, it was propounded by its original discoverer too broadly, in recommendation of the novelty of vaccination, that any person might perform the operation successfully, when, as we confess, and desire to have it made known, that to do justice to the merit of vaccination, it ought to be performed by well instructed and skilful surgeons, who are able to discover whether there be any temporary ill-prevailing in the habit of the patient to be submitted to it, in the form of a slight cutaneous eruption (for this will often render the body unsuscepitible, for a time, of effectual vaccination); whether the prevalence of any epidemic disease may interfere with the success of the process, for it has been remarked by several experienced vaccinators, that the influenza of last year did make it necessary to repeat vaccination more than once or twice before it took its proper effect. Merely to have been vaccinated has satisfied multitudes of those who apply to our establishment for the protection against small-pox; and we cannot help lamenting that it is so difficult to prevail upon parents to bring back their children, at a proper distance of time, to ascertain whether the operation has been unsuccessful, or requiring to be repeated to ensure its efficiency. This board has been unremittingly occupied, and has supplied 20,000 charges of lymph more this year than it has sent out in the course of any former one; and not only have our army and navy, and the colonies, been supplied, but most of the capitals of Europe have availed themselves occasionally of our resources, in which they expres their entire confidence.

FRANCE.

The French ministerial papers are chiefly filled with diatribes against the Swiss for not expelling Louis Bonaparte from their country on the requisition of the Duke of Montebello. The opposition journals laugh at the whole affair.

Reinforcemnets have been sent to the officers commanding the blockades of the Mexican and Buenos Ayrean coasts.

The harvest in France had been most productive.

SPAIN.

Accounts from the north of Spain represent the operation of Munagorry, as well as the Bilbao fueriste, as paralysed by the inactivity of Espartero, who has allowed the Carlists to render Estella infinitely stronger than it was at first. It has always been the case, however, that when the commander-in-chief turns politician, and gets into intrigues and struggles with the cabinet, the Carlists recover from their bad position, and raise their heads in triumph once more.

The Madrid journals that have arrived are to the 19th inst. General Oraa had urgently pressed for supplies of provisions and ammunition, which were instantly forwarded to him. There was little doubt that an agreement was on the point of completion with the firm of Rothschild, by which 800,000*l.* would be advanced on a mortgage of the quicksilver mines of Almaden.

No further news from the army of the centre and north had transpired Much uneasiness was felt at Madrid respecting the result of the operations against Morella.

TURKEY.

At Constantinople, on the 26th ult, there was a current rumour that the British schooner Cruiser, Captain Clarke, has been captured by the Russians on the coast of Circassia. This vessel left Malta on the 9th with lading for Trebisond, and some sugar for Redoubt Kaleh. After having disembarked what it had for Trebisond it continued its voyage, and was driven towards the coast of Abasia, where it was captured. It is said to have been sent to Sevastopol.

Notwithstanding the pacific language held by the Porte, the sending of reinforcements to Asia Minor has not been discontinued; the military preparations are throughout the provinces around Iconium and Sivas assuming daily a more formidable character. A body of militia of (15,000) is being collected at Angora, and Omar Pasha is to leave the capital in a few days to assume the command of it. The appointment of Tahir Pasha, the ex-Captain Pasha, to the district of Aidin, is attributed to the wish on the part of the Porte, when Asia Minor is on the eve of becoming the theatre of important events, of trusting the government to a man of determination and energy. The general impression among the Turks is, within the last ten days, that, coute qui coute, the Sultan will intervene in the affairs of Syria.

The bar at the mouth of the Danube has so much risen within the space of three years, that unless measures be taken for clearing away the sand, the channel will, before long, have grown unnavigable for light ships. The average depth of the Sulina branch of the Danube, previous to Russia taking possession of the islands at its mouth, was eleven feet; it is at present reduced to nine. The extraordinary development which the trade with Wallachia and Moldavia has assumed of late years, to the detriment of Odessa and other Russian ports, renders it highly probable that the Russian government will take no steps to remedy a circumstance which, if left alone, will, ere long, occasion the entire ruin of a rival commerce, unless driven to it by the governments whose commercial interest is staked on the preservation of the navigation of now so important a river.

RUSSIA.

The greatest mystery still surrounds the political negotiations of Toplitz, but it appears certain that the most important part of these negotiations has been treated of between the Emperor of Russia and M. de Metternich. It is supposed that the affairs of the East have been the principal subject of this conference. Travellers lately arrived from Russia say that there is great activity in the war department. Large bodies of troops are marching towards the interior, depots of arms and ammunition are everywhere established, stores are marked, and large troops of soldiers approach the Black Sea.

SWITZERLAND.

The Swiss are calculating their chances against an appeal by Louis Philippe to the ultima ratio regum should the diet decline to expel Louis Bonaparte from the territories of the confederation. The Observateur Suisse contends, from the necessity under which Louis Philippe labours, of leaving an army on the Pyrenees, another in La Vendee, 16 regiments in Africa, 31 in Paris and its vicinity, 19 in Lyons, 60,000 men on the frontiers of Belgium, and an imposing force along the Rhine, that it would be impossible for him to bring into the field, against Switzerland, more than from 50,000 to 69,000 men. "Now," observes the Observateur, "the Helvetic Confederation can command an army of 67,000 men, and a landwehr of 30,000. There are besides 170,000 militia inscribed on the rolls, of whom 19,000 are arquebusiers and excellent marksmen. Switzerland can dispose of 450 pieces of artillery, and her arsenals are abundantly stored.

GERMANY.

The commission of the German diet has decided that the diet is competent to examine and adjudicate upon the subject matter of the Hanoverian petitions complaining of the arbitrary and unconstitutional measures of the King.

NAPLES.

On the 1st August, the Queen of Naples was delivered of a prince, and there was a magnificent eruption of Vesuvius.

UNITED STATES.

The French blockading squadron captured the American shooner Love, Captain Clarke, on the 16th June, as she was endeavouring to enter the port of Matamoros. A lieutenant and nine men were put on board, to convey her to Sacrificios, but she was re-captured by the master and two sailors, and had arrived at New Orleans.

A furious discussion is going on at New Orleans as to whether the French have a right to capture ships under the circumstances of the present blockade against Mexico The pro-French party declare, and they quote Vattel largely as their authority, that the blockade, being now known and published all over the world, any vessels of neutral nations attempting to run the blockade do it at their own risk, and are, therefore, liable to capture; and that such had been the law and practice of nations in all wars.

The other party admit that such had been the practice: but they argue that it was only between nations flagrante bello, after war was declared, and not in such an instance as the present—that, in point of fact, the operation of the French blockade was as much against the commerce of the United States and other countries as it was against the Mexicans; and that, if such precedents were recognized, the trade of neutral countries might be unjustly destroyed, in consequence of quarrels with which such countries had nothing to do. It is, besides, urged that the blockading force was inadequate to the extent of coast prohibited. It will be remembered that this inadequacy of the blockading force was lately acknowledged in the Paris papers, in which the manœuvres of Bazoche, the commander, for concealing or making up for the inefficiency, were specified and made matter of boast. These consisted, it was said, in changing the appearance of his vessels by the application of a little paint and alteration of rigging, so that after making their appearance for a short time off one port, and even sailing in shore so as to be plainly descried, they crowd sail for another, where they would be mistaken for totally different vessels; and thus it would seem that each port was blockaded, in the legal sense of the term, by a distinct force. A blockade so constituted was of course clearly against all recognized principles.

TEXAS.

The Mexicans have been committing various depredations upon the Texians and their property, having plundered Goliad, and taken possession of Corpus Christi. The Texians blame General Houston for allowing them to be thus taken unawares, especially as they had voted 50,000 dollars for the maintenance of a body of cavalry, which he (the general) had not levied If the Mexican outrages continue, they talk of marching a force against the Mexican port of Matamoros. In the mean while, by way of increasing their difficulties, the Commanche Indians, almost savage and sanguinary race, have broken in upon the Texian territories, and murdered several of the inhabitants and traders.

MEXICO.

The ports of Mexico were very closely watched by the French cruisers. The contemplated attack on the castle of San Juan de Ulua has for the present been abandoned, the Baron Defaudis, the French minister, having sailed for France. Vessels from United States and Cuba will not be warned off before subject to capture, a sufficient time having elapsed for the blockade to become known. Commodore Bazoche, in the frigate Hermineee, is at anchor under the island of Sacrificios; and one brig and two schooners, and the frigate's launches, are cruizing close in the shoals, and frequently within musket shot of the castle One brig is off Alvarado, which port was opened the 18th of May by the Mexican government. The cruisers off Tampico and Matamoras lay at anchor close in with the harbour, and other vessels are cruising along the coast between these ports.

OBSERVATION ON THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF SELLING TEA.

The extinction of the East India Company's Charter has effected a revolution in the Tea Trade. Before that event took place, the quantity put up for sale was as well regulated, according to the demand, as rations served out to an army could be. The Tea Trade was then a most profitable business. The wholesale Dealer's Warehouse was alike profitable to him, as was the Shop to the Grocer. Some time before the extinction of the Company's Monopoly, Honest John, as he is called, commenced business as an agent, and published a list, which, no doubt, was as unprofitable to the Wholesale Dealers, as it was profitable to Honest John and for this simple reason, that Honest John had all the work done for him by the East India Company: he had no Ship, no Warehouse, no Travellers, and only a few Clerks; therefore Honest John's profits were greater than his expectations, and like the Frog in the Fable he became so puffed that at length he burst.

To us who were a little acquainted with Honest John's movements, there was an inability to account for his quarrelling with his best friend the East India Company, the source from which he received such copious streams, but from his own actions we gather his reason, viz:—that he, in his own person, would represent and become another East India Company; for he actually published a prospectus for the establishment of such Company; he purchased the Wharf of the Company, and one of their Ships; and, extraordinary as it may appear, bought up a great portion of the Company's Tea; and whilst he in one breath was decrying the East India Company, he was in another declaring that there was no Tea like the Company's. We need not dwell on this subject further than stating that the Good Old Company gave Honest John such a kick, that we are afraid he will never recover. We are led to these remarks not with a view of injuring John, for in his situation as Ship Owner, Wharfinger, Tea Agent, and Newspaper Proprietor, he has now enough to do, more especially as he promises still to continue his Tea list, which, we are afraid, will be superseded by every little Dealer in the Kingdom. The list which has supplanted that of Honest John, is one published by a Mr. Moffat. This gentleman was very close on the heels of John, and has now fairly outrun him. We care not how high Mr Moffat may now carry his head, but does he take the most honourable means to support the dignity of a Tea Agent? We care not by what method a man carries on his business, provided he adopts honourable and fair means; but is it fair, that his list should accuse of manœuvering, sharp practicing, and cupidity, the London Dealers merely because Mr. Moffat professes to be a Tea Agent? He does not tell us that Public Sales suit his purpose, or that by Quarterly or Public Sales he is enabled to get his ½d. to ¾d. per lb. without giving credit, or running risk, and that he discounts Barker's Bill at five per Cent. Upon the face of this there is a pretty good profit without manœuvering, and with manœuvering considerably more. Mr, Moffat's Statement is one continued theme of contradictions.—In the first place he tells you, that Tea is an article respecting which experienced Brokers differ 50 per Cent. in their valuations.—We are not surprised at this, seeing that the Importers cram these experienced Brokers to suffocation; and by their withholding their stocks until the Quarterly Sales, bewilder other Brokers, and affright the Dealers. Our remedy for this evil (and the result of the last Quarterly Sale fully identifies itself with the evil) is, that the Public Sales should be brought forward more often than Quarterly, and not to pay attention to Mr. Moffat's list which states "that Tea is the most difficult commodity on which to affix an accurate value. It suits some persons purpose to cry out about difficulty, but there is not old Woman in the kingdom who would not contradict such assertion. We ask who are the persons that are "obtaining a legitimate and honourable means for the acquisition of wealth," ? Not the Merchants, nor the importing Dealers, nor the London Dealers, nor the Grocers; no, the only parties that are securing this acquisition of wealth, are a few monopolizing Brokers and Agents, who, without risk, and almost without expense, manage to secure nearly all the profitable part of the business. We recommend Merchants to bring their cargoes into market as they arrive; and to make a more equal distribution. Why should not Tea be sold in the same way as Coffee, Sugar, or any other commodity? As to the advantage of "Public Sales" over "Private Sales," why the same rule applies to the one as to the other, and the "anxiety to obtain the cheapest purchases, is a guarantee that more than the value will not be given." We fully agree with Mr. Moffat that Tea purchased by "Private Contract" bears no guarantee as to first cost; we differ from him as to value, for by his own showing "a large proportion of the Tea of the present season's import, including all the fine Tea, is now selling at a very large loss upon the actual cost;" and in our opinion it is too bad to find fault with the importer because they frequently split one break into two or three. Surely there is no dishonesty in this, but we think there is more dishonesty in endeavouring to create a further loss by preventing an importer from selling by Private Contract, in order to bolster up the value of Tea sold at Public Auction, when Tea can be bought privately under the public sale's prices. Then, again, Mr. Moffat's advice to those persons who are compelled to buy for credit, not to purchase of importing Dealers, because it is clear that those who do not import, can at the present time afford to sell much cheaper than those who do; they can afford he says, but the question is not whether they can, but whether they will. We suspect that he had not many orders before the public sales, and that he has over-bought himself; and therefore whilst he is so anxious to secure his customer's Tea at the exact cost of the sale, he is afraid that some of the importing Dealers will sell a little under. Away then with such sophistry. No doubt his intelligent correspondents with but little other information than these price lists furnish, will have foresight enough to watch the fluctuation of the markets, and whether it be public sale or private contract, will know how to protect themselves. There are men of business in this Trade of equal respectability with Mr. Moffat: men who have characters to maintain, and who are equally disposed to preserve that respectability as Mr. Moffat. Against these men Mr. Moffat has chosen to a write for his own advantage, whilst he has said not word against a system which, Whilst it engenders all the vices of the East India Company's Monopoly, has none of its advantage. The Trade is, however, thrown open, but the present system is injurious to all excepting a few over-grown Brokers and Agents and we sincerely trust that Merchants and Importing Dealers will adopt the only good plan, viz:—that of selling Tea as other articles are sold at intervals, either by private contract or public sale, and not reserve a quantity for a quarterly sale which overwhelms the market, and as the result of the last quarterly sale shows, only sell little more than one fourth of the great bulk offered. With regard to prices, it was but the other day that Boheas were selling at 5d. to 6d. per lb., and Congous comparatively low. Large fortunes have been made by speculators, who purchased by private contract; the market, however, is at the present moment in a very uncertain state. The low prices at which the retail Dealers have offered in their printed Circular, the large stock on hand and the present mode of doing business, do not lead us to entertain any sanguine expectations; whilst almost every article of consumption is at a high price, Tea is comparatively cheap, and in our opinion will be so until the system is altered. We are no advocates for high prices, but to us it is a matter of regret, that a Merchant or Importing Dealer should lose money by investment, whilst the monopolising Broker, Agent, or Speculator, without risk, and with comparatively little trouble, should fatten on a miserable system. Mercantile Journal, August 14.

The French journals of Thursday (23rd inst.) contain a telegraphic dispatch from the general commanding at Bordeaux, to the effect that Morella was carried by storm on the 16th inst., the breach having been opened the day previous. This announcement is made by the official paper.

The legitimatist and opposition papers are descanting on the flimsy and untenable nature of the relations between England and France, and maintain that in any closer approximation between the two countries, the latter ought to dictate the terms of alliance—in the meantime, England, they assert should be silent as to Algiers.

CANTON PRESS.

Saturday, 26th Jany.

By the arrival of the Premier, from the Downs 2nd September, papers to the 30th August have been received, and we give copious extracts from them, although the news is not of very great importance. The papers all anxiously notice the high price of corn, and meetings of immense multitudes were being held in many parts of the country in favor of the abolition of the corn-laws. The weather in the last week of Aug. had however been fine, and in the southern countries, the crop though late, was expected not to turn out much short of an average one In other respects the general trade of the country is described as flourishing, discount on good bills 2½ @ 3 per cent. In the tea market little was doing, and no material improvement upon the low prices of the last sale had taken place. RAW SILK we find quoted in the Mercantile Journal of 28th August at 18*s.* 6*d* @ 20*s.* 6*d.* for Taysaam, and 20.@ 26*s.* for Tsatlee. The Journal moreover states. The supplies of new Italian Silk continue to arrive slowly, which may be attributed to the prices being lower in this market than on the continent; the business is doing is on a small scale, but holders are very firm, and do not press sales. For China silk there is also a slack demand, but Bengal has gone off steadily at stiff prices. Consols quoted at 94 @ 94¼.

Parliament was prorogued by the Queen in person on the 16th August, to meet again on the 11th October.

The Great Western arrived in Liverpool on the 31st August, after a passage of only 13 days from Newyork. We have not seen any papers mentioning the fact, and are consequently without news from the United States The previous accounts from Canada are of little interest. A bill of indemnity in favor of Lord Durhem was passed in Parliament, to screen his Lordship from any action at law that might be brought against him for any of his acts whilst Governor General of the Canada, whereby the interests of individuals may have suffered.

We recopy from the Mercantile Journal of 21st August some remarks on the manner in which the tea sales are held. We have, on several occasions, expressed our conviction that more frequent sales, and these conducted like sales of other colonial produce would be more likely to conduce to the advantage of the importer instead of allowing, as at present, the influence of the tea agents or brokers an undue weight, and are much pleased to find that the Mercantile Journal espouses the same argument.

A number of war boats have, it is said, been ordered to proceed to Hong-kong to drive away the ships stationed there.

The foreign passage boats have received notice to come to Canton to receive the Hoppo's licence for plying between this and Macao; but we understand that several obstacles are still in the way of settling about them, the Hoppo insisting on compliances and guarantees both from the Chamber of Commerce and the Cohong, which these bodies demur to.

Owing to contention between the Hoppo and the Hong merchants, occasioned by the former's insisting on making a new Hong merchant of an individual known to be in lebted to a large amount, chops for the lading and discharging of vessels were refused to be granted during two days, but the trade continues now without interruption. The hoppo's eagerness to touch the fees from the new Hong, amounting to 30 or 40,000 Taels, made him thus solicitous about it, but the Hong merchants refusing their guarantee, the matter has for the present been allowed to drop.

O Commercio! (a new semi-weekly newspaper of Macao) states that the rain fallen in Macao during the last year, measured only, by the pluviometer of Mr. T. Beale, in, 59, 0, 4, whilst the year before 106, 0, 8 inches fell. Our Macao cotemporary infers from these data that the present year is likely to be a wet one. The quantity however, which fell the year before last, was much more than the average, which is we believe somewhere near 76 inches, from which it would appear, that though unequally divided, but a very small balance of rain is due now.

On the occasion of Mr. Jardine's leaving Canton to return to Europe his friends gave him a public dinner on Wednesday last in the hall of H. M. Superintendents About 110 Gentlemen sat down to a dinner provided by Messrs. Hooker and Lane, Mr. Turner in the chair, supported by Mr. Lindsay. The arrangements were well deserving of praise. Good humour and hilarity reigned throughout, and the party did not break no until dawn of day.

The Viceroy has been very unwell of late, and his death even has been rumoured several times. To the great regret however of his Chinese subjects he does not yet "ramble among the hills with the spirits of his ancestors." His late severe measures against the Opium trade, in which he is said before to have had no inconsiderable share, have rendered him very unpopular, people disbelieving that his acts proceed from a conviction of the danger of Opium smoking, but merely to curry favor at court. His son, it is said, has lately been caught in the act of smuggling Opium, and the fortunate captor of this important prize, did not give him his liberty, until well paid for it; his ransom was, we believe, estimated at 30,000 Taels.

Within the last few weeks several Europeans, both here and in Macao, have been attacked by the small pox, and some anxiety prevails among the foreign community as to it's spreading and about the inefficiency of previous vaccination. It will be seen from an extract we take from the Times of 30th August, that it is the opinion of some of the most eminent medical men in England that vaccination is an efficient protection against contagion.

ON THE RECENT DEATH OF A YOUTH.

Oh death! couldst thou no worthless victim find,
No one whose hoary locks proclaimed his years;
That thou didst seize the youth of generous mind,
Whose modest worth our memory endears.

Might not the castle tottering in the air,
Have been o'erthrown, thy fury to assuage;
Or must the fabric newly built, and fair,
Be swept away in thy impetuous rage?

I know thee well, thou tyrant of the grave,
Full many a time I've marked the passing bier;
Nor hand nor footstep from thy grasp can save;
All fall before thee in thy mad career.

"My mad career." (I heard the monster cry.
While still my lips were murmuring for the youth;)
"I'm but the Viceroy of the King on high,
And His commands are righteousness and truth.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—We have not heard of any transactions during the week in LONGCLOTHS or COTTON YARN the demand for which continues very slack.

WOOLLENS.—A small sale of SPANISH STRIPES was reported, but we have been unable to learn the particulars. Prices have not however further receded. LONGELLS are very depressed, and no sales to report

METALS.—LEAD without alteration. BAR IRON may be quoted a little higher, there being very little in the market; the other sorts are as before, none from the late arrivals having yet been landed.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER has declined a little and is dull of sale. The last importation of about 3000 Piculs, was sold at Macao last week, we hear, at equal to about 6. 75. BETELNUT in demand at our quotation.

RICE.—As is usual at this season of the year there is more speculation in Rice, and it has advanced fully 5 cents.

COTTON.—About 3000 bales of Madras have been disposed of during the week. The Tinnevelly from 8.3 @ 8 7, some of it being very inferior; the Western at about 7 5 There have been small sales of Bengal, generally of the lower descriptions at from 7.5 @ 8, and they do not offer for the best more than 9. In Bombay there has been no transaction.

OPIUM.—The Lintin report exhibits increased deliveries since the 8th inst., but we believe they consist almost entirely of shipments by small foreign vessels to the westward, for in this market there is nothing doing. Reports are very current that a commissioner has been appointed for this Province whose principal duties will be the suppression of the opium trade, and that the severest measures will be resorted to. Lintin deliveries to the 22nd were: Patna old 2, new 94; Benares old 9, new 26: Malwa 88; Total 218 chests.

EXPORTS.

NANKEEN STUFF.—The market has not yet opened, but the Silkmen are lowering their tone a little; one or two shipments are reported, the price, we suspect to be hereafter settled. The quotations in England per Premier are nominally the same, but the high price has checked clearances.

TEA.—The tea-men have been compelled to follow the example of the Hong-merchants and are disposing of their teas at our quotations. Few of the fine chops of any description remain, and the lower are approaching their relative values. A very few purchases of Young Hyson and some to a more considerable extent of Cargo-Skin are the only transactions in Green Tea worth recording, the prices asked for most kinds being much higher than buyers are willing to pay.

VOL. 4. No. 22. Canton, Saturday, 2nd February, 1839. No. 178.

To the Honble Court of Directors of the E. I. Company.

Honorable Sirs.—We the undersigned merchants of London engaged in the trade with China beg leave most respectfully to bring under the consideration of your honorable court the expediency of discontinuing advances on goods through the finance committee in Canton.

We are aware that the court's attention was drawn to this subject in the early part of last year, at the instance of the East India and China Association, which will render it unnecessary for us to address you at any length with reference to it; but at the same time we cannot refrain from strongly urging upon the honorable court the great disadvantages under which we continue to labour, from the very singular circumstances in which the trade with China is necessarily conducted under the present system of advances upon goods hypothecated to the company, which leads to encourage undue speculations, and produces sudden and great fluctuations in the money market: thereby materially affecting the price of China produce, and interfering with prices and returns for British exports, to the serious detriment of the trade of the country. We do not doubt but your honorable court must be anxious to relieve the trade with China in this respect, as we are persuaded that you will experience no difficulty in procuring the necessary funds for the home charges from the three presidencies in India, at a fair and equitable rate of exchange; and we therefore respectfully entreat that directions may be forwarded to withdraw the finance committee at Canton

We have the honor to be &c. &c.

It's departure was immediately followed by a change of wind, from SE to ENE (as seen above) and more cloudy weather. I was led to notice the change of wind from having heard an "old salt" assert his firm belief that the Aurora was caused by the meeting of two opposite currents of air; as I have never known that theory mentioned elsewhere, I presume it must have originated with him, and been the result of his own observations. In the present case however, the light was seen at the south, the quarter from which the wind was blowing until after its disappearance.

Proclamation.

Tang, President of the Board of War, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces &c., and Ee, Vice President of the Board of War and Lieutenant Governor of Canton hereby proclaim to the merchants of every foreign nation for their full information:

During a period of two hundred years that the Celestial Dynasty has permitted you to trade at Canton, being nourished by its boundless compassion, you have reaped a full harvest of profit and advantage; and it being a matter of notoriety that the very lives of you outside foreigners depend upon a supply of the two native productions tea and rhubarb, you could not exist a single day without our trade, while the Heavenly Dynasty cares not one jot for yours! You have nevertheless for years past devoted your minds to the Opium trade as the only channel to profit! Your store ships hoard up and deliver vast quantities of the drug in constant and rapid succession; and traitorous blackguards in league with you, purchase and supply it to the poor deluded smokers who openly practice the vice as though it were an allowed custom. The outer seas are thickly studded with (vessels) which carry the baneful drug into every city in the Empire.

It has been surmised that you are scheming to drain out the wealth of the central Kingdom and to subvert the destinies of her people. * We shall not stop to notice such absurdity. The rich mines and countless treasures of the Heavenly Dynasty's! can they by such means be exhausted? Your object, in bringing hither the noxious filth, is profit. The subjects of the central kingdom bear no enmity towards you: why, therefore, should you scheme to compass their destruction?

The love of gain has taken deep root in your hearts and has banished all fear (of the laws) But you should recollect that when you have pushed matters to their natural boundary, they must recoil: if the indignation of heaven be once aroused, not only will the importation of Opium be cut off but the exportation of tea and rhubarb may also be interdicted. Our laws would sanction this, and it is a measure which must be adopted, you cannot therefore but feel deep anxiety on this point.

Edicts have been repeatedly issued and we, the Governor and Fooyuen, have again and again counselled you, but intent only on amassing wealth you shut your ears against advice. You pretend that all the foreigners who come to Canton are upright and honorable men; yet some of them have recently been discovered in the act of bringing up Opium in the Schooners, and the crafty malignity of their dispositions exposed to the world! Can you any longer loy claim to be called honorable men? Do you now pretend to say that you confine yourselves to honest and fair dealings?

These wicked practices have at length awakened the deepest indignation in the breast of the great Emperor who has set his whole mind upon their being thoroughly uprooted. He has commanded his ministers to deliberate and frame the most rigorous laws, which he has directed the great Officers of the Provinces to carry into effect with unrelenting severity. The thoughts of heaven are bent with intense earnestness (on the uprooting &c.): his pleasure has but to be obeyed!

We the Governor and Lieutnant Governor have recently received a record of the holy will commanding the naval officers of every station to assemble their squadrons, complese their armament of guns and spears—and dispatch them to cruise about in every quarter of the seas, east, west, and south, so as to form a chain of cooperation to guard the coasts, seize all native smuggling boats, and drive out all foreign ships, they may find loitering about. The superior officers of the civil department on shore are also commanded to exact the utmost vigilance from their subordinates, in apprehending all who are connected with the opium traffic; whether melters, whole sale or retail dealers, or smokers. Thus by land and sea shall we be vigilant, from first to last stern and unrelenting.

Hundreds have already been apprehended. Upon those re ro ates, who, regardless of their lives have incorrigibly persisted in their unlawful calling, have visited the severest punishment which the law inflicts: such were Kwo Aping, Ho Lemkin and others who the evidence against them being clear and conclusive, we sentenced to be strangled. The less criminal will be punished according to their deserts. The people are awe-stricken: tens of thousands have left off smoking and voluntarily delivered up their pipes to Government; numbers trembling at the stern severity of the laws have cast their smoking filth into the street and destroyed their apparatus; and those blackguards who, no longer able to exercise their vile calling, have taken alarm, and fled away, are still more numerous. All this has been effected by the measures adopted in Canton; and occurrences, such as we have mentioned, you may see every day among our people.

We have thus clearly unfolded to you the state of affairs: reflect upon the passing events, and ask yourselves whether you can yet cherish hopes that after a while the former state of things will return. The people of the Central Kingdom who break the laws, are visited with the severest punishment: can you, then, expect that we will swerve from the even path of justice and treat you with clemency, while you, with your eyes open, wilfully give yourselves up to licentiousness and villainy? No! the laws must be administered with an even hand, that the majesty of Heaven may be manifested.

You foreigners have brought your ships from far distant shores, for the purpose of employing your capital to advantage. But why should you court destruction in the garb of profit? Our people are all, at this moment, leaving off the use of Opium, and the rascals who used to purchase from you are either all fled or in concealment. The Officers of Government are administering the laws with unrelenting severity, and the panic stricken people dare not engage (in the traffic.) Every avenue for the disposal (of Opium) is blocked up, and you can no longer make the least profit on it.

Too many of the Central Kingdom's people have sacrificed their lives to Opium; but now they regard it as a deadly enemy, and cast it from them into the streets as they would dirt and filth—can you then still cherish hopes? Will you not turn from the path of error?

Uniting the circumstances, we the Governor and Lieutenant Governor issue this edict: most earnestly do we command you on receipt of it, to turn from and cast off your, hitherto, vile courses, and send every one of the receiving ships, now anchored in the outside waters, back to her country. No vessels which do not enter the port, although they be not Opium store ships, must be allowed to sail about, or anchor, where and when they please. Let each of you carry on his own business in peaceful probity, and you will mutually reap a golden harvest of honest gain. But if you, from first to last, pertinaceously refuse to reform your errors, making avarice your sole principle of action, it is clear that you, of yourselves, at andon all claim to the protection of our laws, and we the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, need not give ourselves any more trouble to warn and exhort you, nor to adopt preventive measures against you, and appreheud (our people); it only remains for us to report the state of things to the Throne and suggest that our ports be closed against you and all commercial intercourse with you cut off for ever. When the peril is once abat, it matters not whether you bring Opium or not; for the exportation of the native productions tea and silk, being prohibited, we shall hold your lives in our own hands.

It appears that the Kings of your respective nations have hitherto been reverently subsiduive. The laws by which they govern you are dreadfully severe, and when the supplies of tea and rhubarb shall be cut off, and they begin to enquire into the cause, you foreigners, although you have managed to escape the net of the Heavenly laws, will find it difficult to avoid the meshes of your own.

Now the Great Emperor has specially appointed an Imperial Commissioner to come to Canton, to enquire into the state, and take cognizance, of the maritime affairs of the country. His arrival is now hourly looked for. His object is to pluck up the root of the evil, and thouroughly eradicate the glaring sicer to break the vase and sink the ship: to purify the land ere he quits from his labours.

O! ye foreigners, your endeavors to amass profits are fraught with imminent danger; turn from them. then, at once lest you bring down sorrow on your heads, for the consequences of your persisting in them will be even more dreadful than is stated in our edict, and we, the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, shall look with disgust and indignation upon your blind stupidity.

Our hearts still yearn with cherishing tenderness towards you; we cannot rest without again advising and earnestly warning you, that you may turn into the path of safety. Listen, then, to our words that hereafter you may have no cause for repentance.

A special proclamation.

S. FEARON.
Chinese Interpreter G. C. C.

January, 1839.

To the Honourable the Chamber of Commerce
&c. &c. &c.

A respectful communication.

We beg to hand you copies of three Edicts which we have received in reply to your three petitions presented to the Viceroy, the other day, and requesting you to give your attention to each and all, we remain with compliments &c.

The Hong Merchants.

January 27th, 1839.

Respecting Licenses.

Tang, President of the Board of War, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces, proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

On the 21st inst. Lindsay, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce, presented the following petition:—

To His Excellency
The Governor of the Two Kwang Provinces,
&c. &c.
Sir,

We had some time ago to thank Y. E. for your Edict in which you consented that a certain number of boats should be allowed to run between Canton and Macao for the conveyance of letters and passengers; and promised that when the regulations were agreed to, and bonds given, for their conduct, licences should immediately be granted.

In compliance with the Hong merchants wishes we consulted with them, and prepared the Bonds with which they expressed themselves perfectly satisfied and promised that the licences should be granted immediately which, however we have not yet received; the delay has caused great inconvenience to all, more especially as this is the season for the ships leaving the port

The boats are now waiting at Macao for permission to enter the port that they may be examined and receive their licences; we have therefore to request Y. E. to grant them that there may be no further delay.

We have the honor to be
H. H. LINDSAY.
Chairman.

This coming before me the Governor I have examined and find by the records that the Collector of Customs in conjunction with myself has already considered upon the expediency of allowing seven decked boats to run for the purpose of conveying letters to and from, besides Elliot's yacht, and has framed regulations for examining them on entering and leaving the river. He also submitted to me the form of the licenses which I directed to be adopted. We also conjointly issued an admonitory edict for your instruction and obedience.

In compliance with your petition I forthwith directed the Hoppo to examine into the fixed regulations, and, if your bonds were really delivered up, to issue his commands to the Hong merchants to grant you the licenses.

Uniting the circumstances I issue this edict. Immediately on receipt of it let them make the clearest investigation and if the foreigners have really given over their bonds, let them inform them of its contents for their information. Wait till the day arrives for granting the licenses and then direct the foreigners to anchor the seven appointed boats, close to each other, on the river in front of the factories, where they must remain till the Hoppo has examined numbered and branded them, and stamped their passports, and then be allowed to run according to the regulations. Do not oppose my commands.

January 24th, 18 S.

Tang, President of the Board of War and Governor of the two Kwang Provinces &c. &c., and Ee, Collector of Customs at the Port of Canton, &c. &c., issue an edict to be implicitly obeyed.

Whereas the Hong merchants petitioned, stating the request of the foreign merchants, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce, that licenses might be granted to a certain number of decked boats, for the convenience of carrying letters to and from. We directed them, in a responsive edict, to consult and devise some plans, (for the management of the boats, T.) and whereas they have now laid before us the plans they have devised, we hereby grant what they request.

This indulgence being shewn to the wishes of the foreigners, it is necessary that some regulations be passed to restrain and examine (their boats T.)

Now we, the Governor and Hoppo, do permit that the boats be managed according to the regulations framed by the Hong merchants, as in their petition are set forth.—The number of boats for carrying letters is limited to seven; the character 順 "obedience" to be employed as a distinguishing title: the four characters 奉牌三板 i.e. "Licensed boat" to be inscribed on the stern and after sails of all the boats; as well as of the Yacht belonging to the superintendent. Elliot. each boat will receive a stamped passport, which must also be sealed as entering the river they must apply at the Bogue (Custom House) for examination, where the blanks will be filled up, and the passport stamped: on leaving the river they must apply at the Tsang sena station to be examined, where the blanks will be filled up and passport signed: if they start from Whampoa to leave the river this will be done at the Whampoa Custom House: all boats passing the Forts and Stations, will, after being duly examined, be allowed to proceed: when the passports are all sent the Hong merchants, must petition to have new ones granted, and the old ones must be returned that no confusion be caused: The boats must all be secured by the Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce and the Hong merchants must also deposit a bond with us, to be placed in records.

If after receiving her passport any boat omit applying at the respective stations for examination, that her passport may be filled up and stamped; if any boat on passing the several stations and forts, persevere continue her course and refuse to be searched; if any boat sail by in the night without applying for examination; if any boat carry opium or other prohibited goods or military weapons; she will be instantly stopped, her cargo seized by Government; and an investigation respecting the smuggling affair, instituted; her passport will be taken from her, and the boat will be destroyed, and another licensed in her place: The foreign merchant, who accuses (the offending boat) and the Hong security merchant will also be held responsible.

The superintendent Elliot is going to and coming from Canton or Macao must obey the instructions in the former edict issued by me the Governor. Before and after leaving or arriving at Macao, he must state in a clear report to the Tang-chi, the objects and time of his arrival or departure, and on passing any Revenue Station he must apply to be examined and to have his passport filled up and stamped.

The Custom House Stations must report every ten days the number of boats that have passed examination, their complements of sailors, and number of passengers; and the Hong merchants must report this once a month, that we may keep a proper check upon them.

If, after these established regulations are made known, any underaged boat attempt clandestinely to enter or leave the river, the strictest orders will be instantly given to the cruisers and forts to act in conjunction with the Revenue force, and drive them out by force of arms. Do not, then, bring yourselves into trouble!

Considering the circumstances, we jointly issue our commands which the Hong merchants must implicitly follow in the management of the (brit) business; let them also inform the several foreign merchants of their purport, that they may implicitly obey. Do not oppose: a special edict.

Respecting Stoppage of Chops.

Tang, President of the board of War, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces, proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

On the 21st instant, Lindsay, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce, presented the following petition.

"To His Excellency the Viceroy, &c., &c., &c.,

"We learn this morning that his excellency the Hoppo has been pleased to order, that no chops be granted for the embarcation and discharge of cargo.

* To take their lives.

"We have made the necessary enquiries and find, that this measure of his excellency the Hoppo, does not emanate from any act of the foreigners or non-observance of the laws by the commanders or consignees of Vessels now at Whampoa.

"Therefore, we pray your excellency to give this matter instant attention and to issue an edict that shall prevent the repetition of a similar evil, much valuable property being at the present moment on board chop boats exposed to plunder and damage to our serious loss and injury.

H. H. LINDSAY."

Chairman of General C. of C.

This coming before me the Governor I have examined and find that the Hong merchants have always been the parties who procure boats to carry foreign goods to and from, and there are no records in my office to shew whether the said boats are obliged to take out passes or not, but I will forthwith direct the Hoppo to examine, and act accordingly.

In compliance with the petition I accordingly hereby direct the Hoppo to examine and ascertain whether the chop boats have always been obliged to take out passes; and why they were recently prevented from carrying the foreigner's goods to and from and report same that I may act accordingly.

Uniting the circumstances I issue this edict, which on its receipt by the Hong merchants, must be copied and sent to the foreigner Lindsay, for his information. Let them also enquire into the cause of the cargo boats being lately prevented carrying to and from the foreigner's goods, that I may act accordingly. Let there be no prevarication nor delay. Hasted Hasted These are my commands!

Respecting New Hong.

Tang, President of the Board of War, Governor of the two Kwang Provinces, proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

On the 21st instant, Lindsay, Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce presented the following petition.

To His Excellency the Viceroy of Canton.

Having heard that it is in contemplation to make an addition to the number of the Hong merchants, we take the liberty respectfully to address your excellency on the subject. It will be a course of much satisfaction to us, and of benefit to the Foreign trade, if new merchants of respectability and wealth are added to the colony, but we earnestly request that the strictest enquiry be entered into, in order to ascertain whether or not such be the case. The foreign trade is one of vast extent, and for a merchant to conduct his share of it with credit to his own country and with advantage to himself and to us, it is requisite that he should be possessed of an adequate capital; and also be a man of high character so as to command the respect and confidence both of native and foreigners. Of late within the last few years several new Hongs have been established, without sufficient enquiry having been made on these points, and the result is that being needy men and without the requisite experience in business, great inconvenience has been constantly occasioned from their inability to pay up their duties to Government and their current accounts to the foreign merchants for goods purchased by them. Thus we are apprehensive that debts may again accumulate, as in the case of Hingtae and Chunqua's hongs, causing heavy losses to us and great difficulty and embarrassment to the Cohong.

In order if possible to obviate the recurrence of such evils we consider it incumbent upon us now to address your excellency on the subject and remain,

We are, &c.

H. H. LINDSAY.

Chairman of the General C. of C.

This coming before me the Governor, I have examined and find that from time immemorial the number of Hong merchants has been fixed at thirteen, but latterly inefficient persons having gradually crept into the Cohong, the debts to foreigners rapidly increased.

I the Governor in a report to the Throne suggested that thirteen should be the limit, and that when a vacancy should occur the senior Hong merchants should select a gentleman of family, respectability and substance to fill it, they becoming bound as his secreties, and to assist his Hong when requisite. They must not indiscriminately and hurriedly make the selection, nor must any one endeavour to grasp and secure the whole trade to himself. The records also prove that I directed the Hong merchants to adopt the above mode.

If there is any vacancy at present in the Cohong; whoever is recommended it is the province of Government to approve or disapprove of his appointment and this tests with me, the Governor; the outside foreigners need not therefore pretend to interfere in the matter. If a merchant of go respectability be appointed and, as you state, you cannot put confidence in him, sell your goods to other Hongs; you are not compelled to trade with any particular Hong. What evils can result (from his appointment if you act thus?)

Yesterday the foreign merchants Russell and others presented a petition, and I, the Governor, replied in a luminous and explicit manner; to-day you foreigners again come to my Office and annoy me with your puny whining; such conduct is really disgusting, and it is plain that some native traitors are inciting you, that they may profit by your stupid trifling. My indignation has truly no bounds, and on discovery of those traitors, I will most assuredly prosecute them with the most unrelenting severity.

Uniting the circumstances I issue this Edict, on receipt of which the Senior Hong merchants must inform the foreigners of its contents for their information and obedience. Do not oppose. A special edict.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Dear Sir,

We have to day witnessed the procession of the King in his visit of charity to one of the Wats located near our residence. He passed in his boat so near that we had a fair view of his person from our verandah. He was attended by his nobles and chief men, each in a separate boat, all numbering about one hundred. Each boat was propelled by thirty or forty men, the King having in his own boat, which is one hundred and twenty feet in length, about eighty men. The central part of the boat, occupied by his majesty, is covered with a gilded canopy which shields him from the sun, with open sides which allow a free circulation of air. The rest of the boats are made in the same form, but less in size and the covering of a less expensive material, though many of them are more or less gilded. In the procession the King was preceded by about half of his attendants, among which were his military guard, and followed by the remainder. On reaching the Wat he is borne on a sedan from his boat to the temple, where he listens during half an hour or more to the service of the temple, and leaving a present of priests-garments, proceeds to another Wat or returns to his palace in the same manner in which he came. In visiting the Wats of Bankok, of which there are about one hundred, he spends annually about two weeks, but many fail to receive a visit from his majesty during that time. This annual visitation to the temples gives countenance to the religion of the land while it serves as a compliment to those who patronise the Wats, each nobleman having his own. The King's person indicates no want of good living, he has an agreeable countenance and possesses by no means a sanguinary temperament. Among his ministers are Chinese, Portuguese and English. Judging from the parade of this day compared with that of former occasions, we might infer that he is losing somewhat his interest for the system of religion it is calculated to sustain; still, he has probably at heart the same attachment to the idolatry of the land that he ever had, but some of his chief priests have not been backward to avow their scepticism relative to their own religious theory. Nevertheless this superstition has such a hold of the ignorant populace as to secure from them a liberal support for a priesthood numbering a score of thousands and a rich endowment of religious institutions amounting to one hundred in this city.

With this brief sketch I subscribe myself,

Yours truly,

AN OBSERVER.

Bankok Siam, Oct. 20th, 1838.

Sir,

Of late having considered that a more easy, more expeditious and less expensive code of signals could be invented than what is at present used; thinking how it was to be effected it very soon occurred to me, that if four equilateral triangle flags were to be made each composed of four equilateral pieces, of the four colours, red, white, blue and yellow, that by turning them up side down and round about, various could be the exchanges rung, to try the experiment being little trouble or expense, I set to work, and soon found that with four colours in four flags, I could ring the exchange 24 times, each flag being capable of expressing either 6 letters or numbers; a copy of the flags can be seen at the shed where the new modelled boat is. Any information from an observer whether my ideas are correct or not on this subject, will be received with thanks, by

Yours most obedient,

H. DEMPSTER.

Saturday, 2nd Feby.

It will be seen from the proclamation we publish, issued by the Vice-roy to foreigners to warn them to discontinue the outside Opium-trade, that we are threatened with a stoppage of all trade if the Traffic in Opium is not put an end to. It is impossible to say how far the local Government may be serious in its threats, and indeed whether they can, if they are so, put in execution a measure which must throw out of bread an immense laboring population, both in the immediate vecinity of Canton, and in the Silk and Tea-districts; we should think that such a measure would be fraught with the greatest danger to the tranquility of the country, and of this the Government is well aware, if we are to judge from the report to the Court from Kishen, Vice-roy of Pih-che-lih, which we published a fortnight since, and wherein the possibility of the people of Fukkien and Kwangtung provinces joining in rebellion with foreigners against the Imperial Government is contemplated. That document is indeed one of great interest and importance, as coming from an officer of great influence, and high in the Imperial confidence, he himself being one of the four great ministers of State. In fact, our Vice-roy's proclamation seems in part to have been framed upon that document, several of its parts being similar, and it is moreover said that from 31 Governors have the Imperial Government received reports concerning Opium and Sycee which are all said to concur in attributing to the former the diminution of the latter, and all condemning the Opium-trade and the ruinous consequences of the use of the drug in the strongest terms, and most of them recommending, as a remedy, a temporary stoppage at least, of all foreign trade. It appears to us that the exertions now made by the Government to put down the Opium-trade are very different in their character to their former opposition, and, judging from what we see and hear, the authorities have an earnest intention to put it down altogether. The step taken by our Vice-roy in causing a proclamation to be made, addressing himself direct to foreigners, and having it translated into English, and printed for distribution by Chinese officers on board of foreign ships, is quite a novel feature in Chinese diplomacy, and seems to afford a proof of the anxiety he feels to put down the Opium-trade. In how far, indeed, this anxiety may have been sharpened by the expected arrival of the Imperial Commissioner, it is impossible to guess at, but that it has much quickened his apprehensions, there can be little double, as by the presence of this high officer he will be placed not only in a secondary station, but it may also give rise to investigations, which may prove him and his family not altogether as innocent of the participation in the Opium trade as he may wish to appear. It is said that on the receipt of Imperial despatches, announcing the mission of this commissioner, the Viceroy fainted from agitation, and lay insensible for about an hour, which was the occasion of the rumour of his death which we noticed last week. This commissioner is expected to arrive within about ten days, and the entire management of the measures to be taken concerning the Opium trade are entrusted to him alone, without the cooperation of the Viceroy, and much anxiety is felt as to what this commissioner will do. We hear it also said that another commissioner has been sent from Peking to Canton to take upon himself the guard of the sea coast, and that similar officers have been sent to most of the sea ports so as effectually to prevent the importation of Opium. Moreover it is said that a number of Soldiers were preparing at Peking to march to the several sea-port-towns to aid these commissioners if necessary.

We have been kindly furnished with the following notes of Keshen, the Viceroy's of Pechihle official career

He is a Mantchoo tartar, was Fooyues of Honan in 1824; Superintendent of the dikes of the Yellow River in 1827; Governor of Peking in 1837 and at present Governor of Chihle Province and one of the four Cabinet ministers.

Some people will take no denial;—it is only three weeks since we informed the Register that we could not make room for its editorials, and yet in his last number the Editor again recommends to us to transfer no less than FOUR columns from that respectable journal to our own. It becomes therefore necessary again to repeat in order that our Cotemporary may perfectly understand it, that his recommendations on this head cannot be attended to, and that we consider ourselves the only properly constituted authority to judge of the disposal of our columns. Oppose not— a special edict."

By the George IV last from Batavia, 7th December, we hear that accounts had been received there from Calcutta to the beginning of November, from which it appears that the Governor General has proclaimed war against Persia, and we hear it also said against Nipal. The Emma Eugenia, arrived this week from Calcutta and the Straits, the former of which she left in the latter days of September, brings no accounts of these proceedings, and the next arrival from Bengal is therefore expected with great anxiety, to know the particulars of these important events, which are likely, after a peace of nearly a quarter of a century, again to involve the European nations in war.

A letter from the north of India, dated Sept., states that the army for Caubul was to rendezvous at Kurnaul on the 30th October, and Lord Auckland was to have an interview with Runjeet Singh at Loodiana on the 1st November. It was thought that the Governor General might have some thing to propose which was more likely to be acquiesced in when backed by the neighboorhood of the army. The government has given a number of officers over to Shah Soojih to raise a contingent of seven regiments of 1000 strong each, two Cavalry and five Infantry, and he is also to have 12 guns.

We have had the pleasure to notice successively the several numbers of the translation into Chinese of Aesop's fables by Mun Moor Seen Shaou, with the assistance of a Chinese Scholar. We have now to notice the publication of the fourth number of this interesting collection, containing a short preface and a brief memoir of the life of Aesop, besides 22 fables. This last number is like the foregoing, much admired and read by the Chinese, indeed we have heard that it has made its way even into the Government offices and is delighting their occupants. The translator has kindly entrusted us with a number of the 2d, 3d and fourth columns, to distribute among gentlemen not yet provided with any; parties, therefore, desirous to obtain them are requested to send for them to our office, whence they will be delivered gratis.

By the Emma Eugenia we have received Pinang Gazettes to the 3rd. and the Sing. Free Press to the 22nd November. By the Niantic, 10th Sept., from Newyork, later accounts than hitherto, have been received from the United States, but they contain nothing of general interest to our readers, with the exception that the reports on commercial affairs continue to be favorable, and that some advance has taken place as the prices of teas, as will be seen from our extract.

At the request of Mr. Dempster we publish a letter from him, recommending the adoption of a system of signalizing which he proposes. We profess to be profoundly ignorant on such matters, but as his drawings are open to the inspection of the public, they will have an opportunity to judge for themselves. We have also been requested by Mr. Dempster to state that the boat built by him is now ready to be launched in a day or two, and that to get her off the stocks about $250 more than the amount originally subscribed will be necessary, and this he hopes the subscribers will make up to enable him to give a fair trial to his new model.

Many of the Passage boats had been detained at the Bogue for some days, being refused to proceed up the river, but seven of them arrived here together yesterday, having, without permission, passed the Bogue during the night. It will be seen from the correspondence of the Chamber of Commerce with the authorities that it has been arranged to license seven boats. Their passports are being got ready now, and this for our community important matter is on the eve of being definitely settled.

We have seen another edict from the Hoppo commanding the Hong merchants to block up the back doors of the foreign factories. He says that the foreigners need have no apprehension on the score of fire, as from the time the factories were first built in the 25th year of Keenlung's reign up to the present time, they have only once been destroyed by fire: in 1822. But to prove his indulgent compassion he consents that the doors shall not be removed but merely blocked up with brick work which will prevent smuggling, and can easily be pulled down should a fire break out. He appears to be in earnest, as he directs the Hong merchants to report when they have obeyed his orders, that he may send an officer to inspect them.

Orders to Commissioner

On the 9th day of the 12th moon (January) a fire express arrived from the Board of War stating that on the 15th day of the 11th moon an Imperial Edict had been received at Court specially appointing Liu Tseihtseun, Governor of Woo-kwang and a President of the Military Board, as commissioner with seals and credentials, to proceed express to Canton to enquire into the state of and take cognizance of the maritime affairs of the province: and commanding all the naval officers of the province to place themselves under his orders.

On the same day a despatch arrived from the privy council addressed to Tang Governor and Ee, Lieutnant Governor of Canton, handing copy of an Imperial Edict received on the 18th day of 11th moon, to the following effect:

"The importation of Opium having of late years daily encreased, and taken deep root, while vast quantities of Sycee Silver have been flowing out into the outer ocean and draining the country, I the Emperor have again and again signified my pleasure to the said Governor and his colleagues that they earnestly and sincerely endeavor to put an end to the evil. The evil has however been sown so long and taken such deep root, that it is to be feared that it cannot be uprooted in a single day. But if the source of the evil be not discovered and choked up the effects will never be eradicated. I have therefore been pleased to appoint, and have invested with seals and credentials, Liu Tseihtseun Governor of Hookwang, as Imperial Commissioner at the Port of Canton, whither I have commanded him to proceed express to enquire into and take cognizance of the maritime affairs of the province, and have directed all the Naval Officers to hold themselves under his orders.

After Liu Tseihtseun has arrived in Canton, let him forthwith, in obedience to my commands, earnestly and actively set about purifying the land from the effects, and searching for the source, of the great evil. Let him, whenever and wherever he may, thoroughly root up and exterminate the furnaces, fast crabs, dealers in and smokers of Opium, their crimes being of the very heaviest stamp Let Tang and Ee devote their whole energies, as before, to discover and apprehend such criminals, not the least indulgence nor remissness, must be allowed. They must not stand idly looking on, neither must they suppose that the burden is to be removed from their shoulders.

As, however, Tang has to govern two provinces, his duties are consequently very heavy and multifarious: it cannot therefore be expected that he can devote his attention both to the duties of his government, and to the prevention of the Opium and Sycee traffic at the same time: he must either neglect one or the other; it is impossible that he can spare time and energy to uproot so glaring an evil. In consideration of this I have commanded Liu Tseihtseun to proceed immediately to Canton, to take charge of this duty. Let the said Governor and his colleagues exert their whole energies to gain their end, let them divide the duties among them, and each of them devote his whole mind to the performance of the duties and jurisdiction awarded to him: Let them mutually consult and cooperate, and report to me the result; avail yourselves of the present opportunity, and endeavor by every exertion to free the country from the calamitous state in which it has hitherto been, to exterminate accumulated evils, and pluck them up by the roots. Let the same desire old my servants, which animates the breast of your emperor, to free the people of the inner land from their dreadful calamity, incite and urge you on! Let this edict be made public. Respect this."

HAVING BRAINS.—A young and gallant officer of the sister kindom, being struck on the head with a musket ball, the surgeon, on examining the wound, pronounced it dangerous, for they could see the brain. "Faith, then," said he, quite coolly, "you will oblige me by sending a small parcel of it to my father; for by the powers he would never believe I had a morsel."

TWO AGAINST TWO.—A gentlemen, of the name of Man, residing near a private madhouse, met one of its poor inhabitants, who had broken from his keeper. The maniac suddenly stopped, resting upon a large stick, exclaimed, "Who are you, sir?" The gentleman was rather alarmed, but thinking to divert his attention by a pun, replied I am, a double man; I am Man by name and man by nature."—"Are you so?" rejoined the other; "why, I am a man besides myself, so we two will fight you two." He then knocked down poor Man, and ran away.—Sunbeam.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There has been a little more enquiry for Longcloths and several parcels have been disposed of, but without any improvement in price. COTTON YARN. The low price has at length encouraged a little speculative demand, and two or three lots have been sold during the week one of 200 bales a mixed parcel averaging No. 24 at 28 $ and 100 bales yesterday of good quality at 30 $, but we have not obtained the particulars.

WOOLLENS.—The only transaction reported is a sale of 1800 Pieces of good SPANISH STRIPES we believe at 1.40. The demand is very slack. LONGELLS—holders seem disposed to realize at, even the present low rates; 9500 Pieces were sold in the beginning of the week at from 1.80 @ 1.90. 3 months credit, of good quality and assortment, and 1000 Pieces since at 8 40, one half being scarlet, and the remainder generally good colors.

METALS.—The market is firm for IRON; and LEAD remains as before, but we hear of no sales. QUICKSILVER has declined in consequence of a supply of native, but the price is quite nominal.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER if anything rather lower; BETELNUT, the importation being moderate, maintains its price. RATTANS improving; TIN without alteration.

RICE.—has advanced fully 10 cents, the supplies from the Country being short as the holydays approach.

COTTON.—The market for Bombay Cotton has rather declined, holders being anxious to realize, the stock generally being large. Several small parcels of low middling qualities have been disposed of, and a sale of 200 bales of the best quality has been reported to us at 9 T. There have also been sales of 2 @ 3000 bales of Bengal, one lot of about 1500 bales, fetching good prices—Banda 10.5, Jalone 10., and the lower quality 9 5. About the same quantity of Tinnevelly has also been disposed of from 8 8 @ 9.3, and one or two small lots as high as 9 5. The deliveries of last month were.

OPIUM.—The only transactions of any kind are small lots at Macao for delivery to the Westward, but they are on a very limited scale. From the Eastcoast the accounts are nearly as unfavorable as those here, and the severe measures that are, it is reported, to be resorted to by the commissioner on his way down against the Opium trade, have created great alarm, not only amongst the dealers but the smokers, particularly as there have been many seizures of them and the same strict search after them even at Peking, it is said.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—We believe the dealers would now submit to much lower prices, although they still ask 570 @ 580 for the best, but the lateness of the season, an advance in the exchange and general scarcity of money has induced intending purchasers not to offer more than 500 @ 520 for the first quality.

TEA.—About 3000 chests of Ankoi and small parcels of the lower descriptions of Young Hyson, Imperial and Gunpowder, have been purchased at our quotations, probably for America and the Continent of Europe. Beyond these transactions the market has been inactive. We hear that 29 Taels have been refused for good middling Twankay. Cargo of John Bull from Canton: 9660 whole and 1118 half chests of Congou; 406 half chests of Orange Pekoe, 12 chests Pekoe and 1300 boxes Caper.

PROCLAMATION OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

(From the Commercial Advertiser, Oct 23.)

"Declaration on the part of the Right Honorable the Governor General of India," bearing date the 11th October 1838.

"The Right Honorable the Governor General of India having, with the concurrence of the Supreme Council, directed the assemblage of a British Force for service across the Indus; His Lordship deems it proper to publish the following exposition of the reasons which have led to this important measure.

It is a matter of notoriety that the Treaties entered into by the British Government in the year

1832, with the Ameers of Sinde, the Nawab of Bahaw-wulpore, and Maha Raja Runjeet Singh, had for their object, by opening the navigation of the Indus, to facilitate the extension of commerce and to gain for the British nation, in Central Asia, that legitimate influence which an interchange of benefits would naturally produce.

With a view to invite the aid of the de facto rulers of Afghanistan to the measures necessary for giving full effect to those Treaties, Captain Burnes was deputed, towards the close of the year 1836, on a mission to Dost Mahomed Khan, the Chief of Cabool. The original objects of that Officer's mission were purely of a commercial nature. Whilst Captain Burnes, however, was on his journey to Cabool, information was received by the Governor General that the Troops of Dost Mahomed Khan had made a sudden and unprovoked attack on those of our ancient Ally, Maha Raja Runjeet Singh. It was naturally to be apprehended that His Highness the Maha Raja would not be slow to avenge this aggression; and it was to be feared that the flames of war being once kindled in the very regions into which we were endeavouring to extend our commerce, the peaceful and beneficial purposes of the British Government would be altogether frustrated. In order to avert a result so calamitous, the Governor General resolved on authorizing Captain Burnes to intimate to Dost Mahomed Khan that, if he should evince a disposition to come to just and reasonable terms with the Maha Raja, His Lordship would exert his good offices with His Highness for the restoration of an amicable understanding between the two Powers. The Maha Raja with the characteristic confidence which he has uniformly placed in the faith and friendship of the British nation, at once assented to the proposition of the Governor General to the effect that, in the mean time, hostilities on his part should be suspended.

It subsequently came to the knowledge of the Governor General, that a Persian Army was besieging Herat; that intrigues were actively prosecuted throughout Afghanistan, for the purpose of extending Persian influence, and authority to the banks of, and even beyond the Indus: and that the Court of Persia had not only commenced a course of injury and insult to the Officers of Her Majesty's mission in the Persian territory, but had afforded evidence of being engaged in designs wholly at variance with the principles and objects of its alliance with Great Britain.

After much time spent by Captain Burnes in fruitless negociation at Cabool, it appeared, that Dost Mahomed Khan, chiefly in consequence of his reliance upon Persian encouragement and assistance, persisted, as respected his misunderstanding with the Sikhs, in urging the most unreasonable pretensions, such as the Governor General could not, consistently with justice and his regard for the friendship of Maha Raja Runjeet Singh, be the channel of submitting to the consideration of His Highness; that he avowed schemes of aggrandizement and ambition, injurious to the security and peace of the frontiers of India; and that he openly threatened, in furtherance of those schemes, to call in every foreign aid which he could command. Ultimately, he gave his undisguised support to the Persian designs in Afghanistan, of the unfriendly and injurious character of which, as concerned the British Power in India, he was well apprized, and by his utter disregard of the views and in erest of the British Government, compelled Captain Burnes to leave Cabool without having effected any of the objects of his mission.

It was now evident that no further interference could be exercised by the British Government to bring about a good understanding between the Sikh Ruler and Dost Mahomed Khan, and the hostile policy of the latter Chief showed too plainly that, so long as Cabool remained under his Government, we could never hope that the tranquillity of our neighbourhood would be secured, or that the interests of our Indian Empire would be preserved inviolate.

The Governor General deems it in this place necessary to revert to the siege of Herat, and the conduct of the Persian nation. The siege of that city has now been carried on by the Persian army for many months. The attack upon it was a most unjustifiable and cruel aggression, perpetrated and continued, notwithstanding the solemn and repeated remonstrances of the British Envoy at the Court of Persia, and after every just and becoming offer of accommodation had been made and rejected. The besieged have behaved with gallantry and fortitude worthy of the justice of their cause, and the Governor General would yet indulge the hope that their heroism may enable them to maintain a successful defence until succours shall reach them from British India. In the mean time, the ulterior designs of Persia, affecting the interests of the British Government, have been, by succession of events, more and more openly manifested. The Governor General has recently ascertained by an official despatch from Mr. McNeill, Her Majesty's Envoy, that His Excellency has been compelled, by the refusal of his just demands, and by a systematic course of disrespect adopted towards him by the Persian Government, to quit the Court of the Shah, and to make a public declaration of the cessation of all intercourse between the two Governments. The necessity under which Great Britain is placed, of regarding the present advance of the Persian army into Afghanistan as an act of hostility towards herself has also been officially communicated to the Shah, under the express orders of Her Majesty's Government.

The Chiefs of Candahar (Brothers of Dost Mahomed Khan of Cabool) have avowed their adherence to the Persian Policy, with the same full knowledge of its opposition to the rights and interests of the British nation in India, and have been openly assisting in the operations against Herat.

In the crisis of affairs consequent upon the retirement of our Envoy from Cabool, the Governor General felt the importance of taking immediate measures for arresting the rapid progress of foreign intrigue and aggression towards our own territories.

His attention was naturally drawn at this conjuncture to the position and claims of Shah-Shoojaool-Moolk, a Monarch who, when in power, had cordially acceded to the measures of united resistance to external enmity, which were at the time judged necessary by the British Government, and who, on his Empire being usurped by its present Rulers, had found an honorable asylum in the British dominions.

It had been clearly ascertained from the information furnished by the various Officers who have visited Afghanistan, that the Barukzie Chiefs from their disunion and unpopularity were ill fitted, under any circumstances, to be useful Allies to the British Government, and to aid us in our just and necessary measures of national defence. Yet so long as they restrained from proceedings injurious to our interest and security, the British Government acknowledged and respected their authority. But a different policy appeared to be now more than justified by the conduct of the Chiefs, and to be indispensable to our own safety. The welfare of our possessions in the East requires that we should have on our Western Frontier, an Ally who is interested in resisting aggression, and establishing tranquillity in the place of Chiefs ranging themselves in subservience to a hostile Power; and seeking to promote schemes of conquest and aggrandizement.

After a serious and mature deliberation, the Governor General was satisfied that a pressing necessity as well as every consideration of policy and justice warranted us in espousing the cause of Shah Shooja-ool-Moolk, whose popularity throughout Afghanistan had been proved to His Lordship by the strong and unanimous testimony of the best authorities. Having arrived at this determination the Governor General was further of opinion, that it was just and power no less from the position of Maha Raja Runjeet Singh. than from his undeviating friendship towards the British Government, that His Highness should have the offer of becoming a party to the contemplated operations. Mr Macnaghten was accordingly deputed in June last to the Court of His Highness and the result of his mission has been the conclusion of a Tripartite Treaty by the British Government, the Maha Raja and Shah Shooja-ool-Moolk, whereby His Highness is guaranteed in his present possessions and has bound himself to co-operate for the restoration of the throne of his ancestors. The friends and enemies of any one of the contracting parties have been declared to be the friends and enemies of all. Various points have been adjusted, which had been the subjects of discussion between the British Government and His Highness the Maha Raja, the identity of whose interests with those of the Honorable Company has now been made apparent to all the surrounding States. A guaranteed independence will, upon favorable conditions, be tendered to the Ameers of Sinde; and the integrity of Herat in the possession of its present Ruler, will be fully respected; while by the measures completed, or in progress, it may reasonably be hoped that the general freedom and security of commerce will be promoted; that the name and just influence of the British Government will gain their proper footing amang the nations of Central Asia; that tranquillity will be established upon the most important frontier of India; and that a lasting barrier will be raised against hostile intrigue and encroachment.

His majesty, Shah Soojah-ool-Mook, will enter Afghanistan, surrounded by his own troops, and will be supported against foreign interference, and factious opposition, by a British Army. The Governor General confidently hopes that the Shah will be speedily re-placed on his Throne by his own subjects and adherents, and when once he shall be secured in power, and the independence and integrity of Afghanistan established, the British Army will be withdrawn. The Governor General has been led to these measures by the duty which is imposed upon him of providing for the security of the possessions of the British Crown; but he rejoices that, in the discharge of this duty he will be enabled to assist in restoring the union and prosperity of the Afghan people. Throughout the approaching operations, British influence will be sedulously employed to further every measure of general benefit; to reconcile differences; to secure oblivion of injuries; and to put an end to the distraction by which, for so many years the welfare and happiness of the Afghans have been impaired. Even to the Chiefs, whose hostile proceedings have given just cause of offence to the British Government, it will seek to secure liberal and honorable treatment on their tendering early submission, and ceasing from opposition to that course of measures: which may be judged the most suitable for the general advantage of their country.

Goa.

Fancy a city which stretches nearly five miles along the banks of a beautiful river, with quays from which you may step into your boat. The river disembogues itself into a beautiful bay, which is nearly land-locked, with a bar across the sea outlet—a convent rising on a pile of rock on the one hand, and a fortress on the other, the guns of which sweep the bar; from this point, a succession of large, imposing-looking houses line the river side to the old City of Goa, with churches, convents, bridges and causeways, varying the scene.

On arriving at the old Palace Gate, you see pile upon pile of vast churches, such as you see on the continent. You land—you fancy yourself about to enter a large city, when behold! it is a city of churches; not a house meets the view nor an inhabitant – not a sound disturbs the silence' but the echoes of the voices of your party. In fact I shivered at the desolation which every where prevailed. You enter the Cathedral, a vast building, and you find it as if it had been built yesterday. The ornaments and the gold and silk fringes of the alter remain quite fresh—a side door opens, and one or two poor, dirty looking, sallow priests emerge and act as Cicerones. The floor is paved with tomb-stones dating from 1550 downwards! Some of the altars are magnificent—shining with burnished gold. The church of St. Caetan, which is a miniature of St. Peter's, built by Italian monks, is a perfect bijou. I never saw any thing of the kind more beautiful for its size. The shrine also of St. Francis de Xavier is a magnificent sarcophagus, but it is in so small a chapel that it can scarcely be seen to advantage. It has a beautiful portrait of the good man over the door-way, and on the four sides of the sarcophagus are bronze basti relievæ, representing remarkable passages in the life of the Saint. On the top of the sarcophagus is a silver coffin, in which his remains are deposited; how much longer they will remain there is, I think, problematical. They have had several rows, which they call revolutions at Goa, and every two months they elect new Governors. In short they are in a dreadful state of anarchy. The people in Portugal seem to leave them to themselves. Our territory, bordering theirs, is full of fugitives who have run for their lives. They have had, I hear, another revolution within this month. I really think our Government ought to interfere and keep the peace, till some proper authority and force arrives from Portugal to set them to rights. I once dined with their Governor, a cavalry colonel. The society was very curious, not unlike the keys in a piano, black and white alternately. Some of the women not bad looking, and one or two Europeans with good manners. The Native Canarese (as they call them) smoke beams and spit on the floor. It is ridiculous to see some of the fellows who have been Bhojees in Bombay, come to Goa on leave. They mount such coats and hats; I saw a fellow the other day who had only a langootee on with a new shining white beaver hat; so much for Goa and its inhabitants! Sing, Free Press, 8th November.

EXTRAORDINARY FALL OF FISH.

We have received the following statement of an extraordinary fall of fish, from a correspondent of undoubted veracity, who witnessed the occurrence himself, at a place not more than twenty miles south of Calcutta, the Sunderbunds by way of the Salt water lakes. We shall not condescend at present to explain this strange phenomenon, which we of course could do, were we so minded; but every one knows, that the way fishes get out of tanks on to the maidan is by shooting up the water-courses, which after a fall of rain, are formed and run into the tanks: by the same rule, we will suppose the fishes above alluded to, got into the clouds by shooting themselves out of the salt-water lake ala a wafer spout! We hesitate not to lay the account of it before our readers, not doubting but that it will be interesting to some, if not to most of them:

"About 2 o'clock P. M. of Thursday the 20th instant, we had a very smart shower of rain, and with it there descended a quantity of live fish, about the size of three inches in length, and all of one kind only. It is very strange that they fell in a straight line on the road from my house to the tank, which is about forty or fifty yards distant. Those which fell on the hard ground were, as a matter of course, killed from the greatness of the fall, but those which fell, fortunately for them, on the spots where there was grass growing, sustained no injury, and I picked up a large quantity of them 'alive and kicking" and let them go into my tank. Some people suppose that phenomena of this nature take place through the agency of water spouts, which draw up the fish, &c. from rivers and tanks, and afterwards return them to the earth again in showers of rain, and there appears to me no other way of accounting for the occurrence of the phenomena, or that fish should be found so far out of their element. If it were possible for them to get out of tanks themselves, they could; it would naturally be supposed, as easily retrace their steps and jump in again: but such was not the case in the present instance. The most strange thing however that struck me, in connection with this event, was that the fish did not fall better shelter every where, or 'here and there as the 'vulsins' in the old woman's pudding, but they fell in a straight line not more than a cubit in breadth. I have heard of such things happening before, but never on the spot where this happened. The natives living in and about the place, gave to the fish the name of Ulka, but whether this be the right word or not I cannot tell from my own knowledge."—Calcutta Courier, ept. 21. Ibid.

FRENCH SHIP ALEXANDRE.—The Indicateur of Bordeaux contains the following:

"It is reported that revelations of the highest importance have been made to the maritime authorities of Bordeaux by the cook, who was on board the Alexandre when that vessel was put under the command of Captain Bouet.

"The story of the cook is of so grave a nature that we publish its substance, not by any means guaranteeing its authenticity.

"During the voyage from Batavia to Mauritius, in the morning, Capt. Bouet, who was walking the deck with some part of the crew, ordered the cook to prepare his tea. Whilst the latter hastened to obey this order there was a silence of some instants on the deck, then a great noise, caused by a violent struggle, then a heavy body fell into the sea.

"The cook did not disturb himself, but he perceived an officer, armed with a piece of wood, hastily go on deck. The same struggle recommenced. A second fall into the water was heard more distinctly than the first —the captain and the officer had disappeared.

"The noise appeared to increase; cries of distress, threats, blows given and returned, men thrown into the sea, caused the cook to believe that the ship Alexandre was the theatre of a very great crime. The weather was fine and the sea calm.

"The storm which assailed the Alexandre after this terrible event, and to which they attributed the loss of the captain and five men of the crew, gave the conspirators the idea of those writing the tragic end of their comrades; all the sailors signed; the cook, under the dread of threats made by the chief conspirator, signed as well as the others.

"Before arriving at Mauritius, and some days after the storm the conspirators having doubts about an English sailor, notwithstanding he had taken an active part in the assassination, tied his feet and after stabbing him, threw him into the sea.

"The cook, who reports these events, says he only owes his life to the promises they extorted from him, and to the necessity the crew had for his services.

"This man was not detained at Newport with the other companions of Marsaud; he preserved an obstinate silence in presence of the French and American authorities; he did not commit the slightest indiscretion during the last voyage of the Alexandre, under the command of Capt. Casy.

"It is said that his reason has been so weakened by these horrible scenes that he hardly knew his wife at Bordeaux.

"It is said that the French government have demanded of the American, that Marsaud and his companions should be given up."

The owners have published a letter expressing their perfect satisfaction with the French government as to the manner in which the ship was brought home.

The Calcutta papers also contain a long "Declaration on the part of the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India" of War against Afghanistan and Persia, dated 11th October, for which we have not room in this number. We regret to notice the loss of the Protector from London with recruits, in the Eastern Channel. The Ship, Patriot, Bengal Packet and Str. Hilda, all from Singapore had arrived at Calcutta.

BOAT LICENSE.

Be it known that I, Yu, collector of customs at the Port of Canton, &c., &c., have granted this license to serve the holder as his warrant.

The Hong merchants having, at the urgent request of the foreign merchants composing the Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce, petitioned government to allow a certain number of the large decked boats to ply (between Canton and Macao); for the convenience of the letters to and from, I. the Hoppo, having consulted with the Governor, agreed to the terms and regulations proposed by the Hong merchants; namely—that the number of boats shall be limited to seven, exclusive of Elliot's two masted vacht; that each boat shall be secured by the Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce, and also by the Hong merchants, who shall deposit a bond in the public archives; that each boat shall have the character 順 "Obedient" written before her number as a distinguishing appellation; that each boat shall be branded with fire; that the following characters 順字（ ）號奉牌三板 "obedient, boat N°. ( ) which holds a license;" that they shall be permitted to ply between Canton and Macao; that on entering the river from Macao, they shall apply at the Bogue Stations for examination, where their passport will be stamped and the date filled in; that on leaving Canton, they must apply at the Tsungseun station, and when they start from Whampoa, at the Chop-house there, where their passports will be stamped and the dates filled in; that after they have been examined at the several stations, they shall be allowed to proceed on their way without hindrance; that should any opium or other prohibited articles be discovered on board any boat, she shall be seized and detained, and a report instantly made to the governor, that the license may be taken away from the boat and she be destroyed; that should any boat refuse to allow herself to be searched, or sail by in the night without applying, the cruisers and forts shall drive her back.

We therefore jointly grant this passport, which must be respected at whatever station it is presented. Immediately a boat applies, she must be examined and forthwith allowed to proceed. Let no one attempt to delay or extort money from her.

When the blanks in this license are all filled up, let the Hong merchants apply for another.

Given under my hand at the office of Customs at Canton, this 14th day of the 12th moon of the 18th Year of Taoukwang. (26 January.)

S. FEARON.
Chinese Interpreter General C. of Commerce.

Canton, 2d February, 1839.

To the Hong merchants Gentlemen.—We now do ourselves he honor to inform you that we have duly received the licenses for the seven passage boats, all of which are now at anchor in front of the factories, awaiting the examination of the proper officers, after which we shall deliver to each boat their several licenses.

In the edict of H. E. the hoppo, affixed to each license sundry forms of office are specified for the regulation of these boats, which would materially interfere with their efficiency and utility to the public service were they to be strictly enforced. We feel satisfied, however, that such will not be the case; but that the regulations which we framed in conjunction with yourselves, as specified in our letter to you of the 24th of December, will prove amply sufficient to prevent all irregularities. In order to avoid all future misapprehensions, we will now repeat our former words, clearly pointing out to you that our guarantee is granted for the fulfilment of these conditions and no more.

"We shall point out to them (i. e. the owners of the boats), in the strongest terms, the penalty of forfeiture to which they will be liable, should any person connected with a boat be proved to have employed her in smuggling transactions. On coming to or quitting Canton, it shall be incumbent on the master of the boat to request the custom house officers to examine the baggage of the passengers and other articles on board, that all may be passed in due form. On passing the forts, they will also receive instructions that whenever any government cruizer approaches to examine the boat, the said master shall invite the officers so to do.—Thus the two important points of preventing illegalities and permitting the boats to pass up and down without delay, which in commercial affairs is frequently an object of the highest importance, may be combined together."

Grey Longcloths have been sold during the week at $. 90 @ 4 per piece. and a parcel of white, 66 and 72. about two thirds of the former at 4½. Cotton Yarn remains very depressed from the heavy stock, and sales are with difficulty effected. A lot of about 100 bales of good quality Nos 16 @ 36, principally Watertwist was sold at $ 31.

Woollens.—There has been a little more stir in the Woollen market and 3 @ 4000 Pieces Spanish Stripes have been sold during the week, but only at previous rates, viz at I. 25 @ 1: 35, and 1. 40 @ 1. 45. the latter being for favorite manufactnre and packing. Longells. A lot of 2000 Pieces, good quality and assortment, was sold at about 7. 90 @ 8.—, but the market is without animation or improvement.

Metals.—There is a good demand for Iron of all descriptions from the short supply and stock, and a small lot of the small sizes has realized, we believe. even higher than our quotations. Lead on the contrary has rather declined. Quicksilver is also quoted lower, but the price is nominal, there having been no transactions.

Sandalwood.—from the heavy stock continues very dull of sale. the best would scarcely fetch $20.

Cotton.—The holders of Bengal and Madras cotton appear firmer for an advance, the stock particularly of the former, being small, and one or two small parcels have been sold at our highest quotations. Bombay, if anything, is lower, and a sale of from 2000 @ 300 bales has been reported to us of middling to fair quality at 8 3 @ 8.5.

Opium.—There is a complete suspension of all business in Opium, not only in Canton, but by the latest accounts it would appear equally so on the Coast, and the Chinese all now appear to feel that the most rigorous measures will at length be acted upon to put a stop to the traffick. All are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the new Commissioner charged expressly with the fullest powers to enforce them, and who is expected within a month. A seizure of a few chests above Canton in a Mandarin boat, it is said, has led to the closing of the shop of one of the dealers who escaped, and of a Coolie, in the service, they report, of a foreigner, and the Senior Hong-merchants were summoned by the Vice-roy last night into the City. What further proceedings may be taken is not, of course, yet known. Deliveries and stock at Hong-Kong of last month not yet received.

EXPORTS.

Tea.—Owing to the near approach of the Holydays little has been doing during the week.

Nankin Silk.—Contrary, we believe, to general expectation, the market was opened a few days since as high as 550 @ 555 for the finest quality. and about 100 @ 150 bales have been purchased at from 540 @ 555, but we have heard of no purchases of the lower qualities. These high prices will of course induce the dealers to hold out, but we do not believe there is any disposition generally to submit to them, neither the limits nor the prospects in Europe justifying them.

Canton, 9th February, 1839.

These are the regulations which by you were submitted to H. E. the governor; and which appear to have been by him consistered as satisfactory. We shall, therefore, instruct the masters of these seven boats to act in accordance with them—We remain, &c.

Chairman of the General Chamber of Commerce.

Memorial.

Of Chow Teen tseo, superintendent general of the transport of grain, addressed to the emperor, in compliance with H. M's commands to deliberate on the best mode of arresting the Opium plague &c. &c.

I, your Majesty's minister, on the 20th day of the 5th moon of the 18th year of Taoukwang (11th July 1838) received a despatch from the board of revenue, stating, that, "on the 10th day of the 4th "intercalary moon of said year (2nd June 1838) "we the said Board received an Imperial edict to "the following effect." (Here follows a copy of Hwang Tseo tsze'e memorial to the emperor, recommending that the smoking of opium, as well as the dealing in opium, be punished with death: and the emperor's command affixed, that all Viceroys, Foo yuens &c. &c. deliberate upon the subject, and memorialise Him in reply, stating, whether they think Hwang Tseo tsze's plan may be carried into effect or not, and desiring these high officers of state to suggest any improvement on Hwang Tseo tsze's plan, or in fact any plan that will do away with the opium scourge.)

Kneeling with profound respect whilst I read the commands, I looked up, and me thought I saw the heart of my Royal master, steeped to extremity in love and compassion for the black-haired people!

I have heard it remarked, that the man who wishes to cure the empire of any disease that afflicts it, must first look to the source whence the sickness springs, and having maturely considered the lighter and more grave circumstances of the malady, the propriety of more prompt, or more slow and certain measures, should never lose sight of the order in which he should set to work: having maturely considered this point, let him grasp rightly his plan, and put it in force for some time, afterwards he may thus be able to divert the calamity which now afflicts us, and spare the native constitution of our country receiving serious injury.

Now it appears that our empire has sustained grievous damage from the deluge of opium poison: it is indeed as your Majesty's minister Hwang Tseo tsze says, "if the leak in the cup be not stopped up, "where will the dreadful evil end"? However, in reference to encreasing the severity of the laws, I may remark, if this has not been done before the evil began to extend itself, it may not be done now, after the evil has pervaded every part of the empire; and if done, it should only take effect on the governors, not on the governed, for the common people who commit the crime, are the whole empire, and they have been doing so now for several tens of years! and were you in an instant to punish them with too much severity, it would be just as we say, too lax at first, and correcting this by being too rigid (i. e. making a mistake both ways.)
